The authors of Jews In American Wars, published by the Jewish War Veterans of the United States of America, mention the Jewish Welfare Board (p. 100) organized in 1917 but omit any mention of Col. Harry Cutler of Providence, who was its president during the War, a delegate to the Paris Peace Conference, recipient of the Gold Medal of Honor from France, the Distinguished Service Medal from the War Department of the United States, and for whom a New York War Veterans Post was named. “Vanity of vanities,” saith the preacher, “Vanity of vanities; all is vanity.”

Belatedly and incidentally (pp. 103-4) the authors disclose that the motive for publishing material about the military contribution of Jews is to offset propaganda such as that inspired by totalitarians, particularly that used with “characteristic cunning and malice” by the Nazis in the now familiar technique of the “Big Lie,” repeated over and over again “to set the American Jew apart from his fellow citizens.”

The calumny that Jews would not serve their country was first raised in the United States in 1891 in a letter printed in the North American Review by a former Civil War soldier in which he wrote that he never met a Jewish soldier or anyone in the service who had. The “Gay Nineties” were not days of gaiety for Jews. It was the period of the pogroms in Russia, when waves of anti-Semitism were at their peak in Germany and France (Dreyfus affair). Jewish refugees from Eastern Europe were pouring into the United States and American Jews were straining their individual and collective strength to cope with the problems created by this influx.

The Hon. Simon Wolf, President of the B’nai B’rith, an official in Washington, D. Jewish refugees from Eastern Europe were pouring into the United States and American Jews were straining their individual and collective strength to cope with the problems created by this influx.

The agitation aroused by the Dreyfus affair in France and Wolf’s work inspired Jewish citizens in many Jewish communities in the United States to form voluntary military organizations and one of these was the Touro Cadets of Providence.

Judah and Abraham Touro were noted for their philanthropy in the United States. Sir Moses Montefiore, an English Jew, was not only noted for his good works throughout the world but was revered as a devout, observing Jew. The first charitable organization in Providence, Montefiore Lodge Ladies' Hebrew Benevolent Association (1877) perpetuated his name and is still in existence. In 1889 the Moses Montefiore Association of Providence was organized, to be followed by another association the following year by the same name with the number "Two." A year later the Young Men's Montefiore Society was formed.

The Touro Cadets were incorporated in 1897 by Louis Schoenberg, Samuel Cohen, Samuel M. Robinson, Himan Lipshitz, and Jacob A. Robinson "for literary, scientific, social and charitable purposes" from the younger members of the Montefiore Societies. The corps consisted of two platoons aggregating 67 men. Their drillmaster was "Captain" Reilly, whose vocation was that of barber in "Jewtown." Under his wing, the drill corps competed in New York and won a cup, which was the occasion for a week long celebration on their return. The trip to New York was made by the boat and the voyage was rough. Aware of the fact that the floor of the hall would be slippery, the Touro Cadets wore rubbers. The well-drilled corps marched and executed their movements in silence and with precision in response to the metallic clicks of a snapper in the palm of Captain Reilly.

At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, the Touro Cadets offered their services as a body but were told by Gov. Elisha Dyer to enlist as individuals. At three o'clock in the morning of July 3, 1898, all military organizations were summoned by signal of bells which pealed eleven times, twice repeated, at short intervals. Forty-five out of sixty-seven Cadets turned out within half an hour and were on the street in full uniform by 5 a.m. in front of their headquarters on Canal Street. The lineup of militia extended down Smith and Canal Streets from the State House. Adjutant Sackett called the roll, after which the men were dismissed and the Cadets returned to their quarters where they remained to celebrate the 4th of July after putting in a plentiful supply of provisions customary for such an occasion.

The Touro Cadets held balls and outings which were very popular. Rabbi David Blaustein of the Congregation of the Sons of Israel and David is today remembered for the talk which he gave at one of their gatherings. The Convention of Jewish Societies for promoting physical culture among the “Jewish masses” called by the Touro Cadets in cooperation with the Montefiore-Touro Association held at Newport on July 28, 1901, was addressed by Eugene Schreier, a Newport Jewish leader; Julius Engle, President of Congregation Jeshuat Israel (Touro Synagogue); Rev. Joseph Zev (in Yiddish); and His Honor, F. P. Garrettson, Mayor of Newport. The Congregation Jeshuat Israel were hosts at a buffet lunch between 5:30 and 6:30 p.m. At the evening session, which began at 7 p.m., Rev. Bennett Grad, of the Congregation of the Sons of Israel and David, of Providence, gave the closing prayer.

On September 17, 1903, Jacob A. Robinson, Louis Schoenberg and Samuel M. Robinson of the Touro Cadets, together with David E. Bander and Harry L. Sach, received a charter for the “Touro Guards of American Zionists . . . for promoting sociability and literary studies between its members.”

The Touro Guards grew in numbers and popularity and on December 9, 1912, a charter was granted to Jacob A. Eaton, then a State Representative, and twenty-four others incorporated the “Touro Guards Building Association,” for the purpose of procuring a home for the Touro Guards, with membership limited to members of the Touro Guards. Adverse economic conditions and the advent of the First World War put an end to the building plans. The United States entered the war on April 6, 1917, and in September of the same year, the legislature granted a charter to the Touro Fraternal Association, which organized on March 20, 1918, and is today the largest Jewish fraternal benefit association in New England with a membership of 1100 men and women.

For the first half of the twentieth century, the Jewish community matured with the rest of their fellow citizens, who together contributed to the American ideal of freedom and equality. There was no occasion for self-defense or apology until the Second World War when the Nazis, using their special technique of the “Big Lie,” instigated a whispering campaign among the foreign born in the United States, reflecting upon the patriotism of Jews.1

1It is a fact that very many young men fled Russia to avoid military service, but it was not because of cowardice. More than one showed great courage in maiming himself that he might be disqualified. The reason for this attitude was the notorious cruelty and bestiality of the Cossack towards the Jew, particularly on weekends when he was steeped in Vodka. The father of an eligible son went to Constantinople, changed his name and became a Turkish citizen but on his return to Odessa found that all that he had done was useless. His son, Isaac, followed the underground route over the border for “The land of the free and the home of the brave.”

REMINISCENCES OF HARRY CUTLER

Col. Harry Cutler, the manufacturing jeweler, had had experience such as fall to the emigrant boy who arrives in a strange country and must make his way under circumstances every one of which may be an obstacle to success in life unless there is the dogged determination to make progress. He told his story in his own words, as follows: 1

"When less than 9 years of age, I was with my mother and sister and other emigrants sent by an agent to a canning factory in Farnham, N. Y., where for the sum of 90 cents a week I pasted the ends of labels that were to be placed upon the canned product.

"After the packing season was closed I went to Buffalo, where I sold newspapers. This preceded my errand boy experience, which began with a firm in the city of New York. One of my duties was to distribute circulars put up in the guise of invitations. These I was instructed to deliver at the front doors of swell houses. For this I was paid $1.50 per week.

"From New York I went to Fall River, where I worked in the American Linen Company's mill as a doffer for $1.90 per week, ultimately becoming at the age of 14 years, the boss doffer in charge of a dozen other boys and drawing $4.44 per week.

"In order to get this employment, I was obliged to misrepresent my age, my stature helping out in a scheme to insure getting employment.

"One day I came to Providence and walked the streets in search of employment. A Westminster Street tailor gave me a job to sweep out the shop and run errands for $3 the week, but that employment was good for one week only, as the tailor was financially unable to continue it.

"Having already canvassed Westminster Street from the bridge (Market Square) to Olneyville Square and return I now devoted my attention to Weybosset Street, and almost completed a fruitless round when I chanced to drop into an undertaking establishment. The sincerity with which I asked for work led one of the members of the firm to take me by the hand and lead me upstairs to George E. Cole's picture framing establishment, where he requested that I be given something to do.

"Mr. Cole responding, I was put to work making room moulding at $3 per week, my daily stunt [stint] being 1000 feet, which when made ready for delivery I had to take out in large packages to wall paper houses. I remained there until I was earning $10.50 per week when, seeing that there was no future for me in that line, I decided to try something that had some objective point connected with it.

“This determination took me into a jewelry shop, my stipend being $1 per day. From this employment I went to that with a jewelry jobber, who ultimately engaged in manufacture. The knowledge of the business this far acquired placed me in a position to take a foremanship at $8 per week; later I was made general manager with the princely pay of $20 per week.

“I had seen enough of the business by this time to realize that I had struck my gait. I wanted to go into it on my own account and found the opportunity when William A. Walton offered for sale a small factory that had been taken under foreclosure of a mortgage.

“I had saved no money, for I was the only wage-earner in the family, but I found a friend who advanced me $150. That was but a small part of what Mr. Walton wanted, for the property offered for sale had been appraised at $1,000. Realizing that under a forced sale not more than $150 might be bid, Mr. Walton decided to sell the outfit to me for the little capital I could offer. With the delivery of the bill of sale, which is now framed and hanging in my office, Mr. Walton wished me God-speed. It was hearty encouragement to the erstwhile, non-English-speaking emigrant boy and it stimulated me for successful endeavors.”

Died in London August 27, 1920 on his way back to the U. S.
When Matilda J. Pincus died on March 22, 1954 her span of life had extended three years beyond the Biblical threescore and ten. No person in the Jewish community of Providence has given for so long a time devoted service to any Jewish institution in the state. She did not live to enjoy the fruits of her labor, although she had participated in the planning of the new Temple Beth-El on Orchard Avenue. The last rites for her took place in the Temple on Broad Street with which she was closely associated from its dedication.

Newman Pincus and Adelaide Henius were married in the Congregation of the Sons of Israel and David in 1880. Their first child, Matilda, was born on January 9, 1881 in Fall River, Massachusetts, but grew up in Providence where family circumstances compelled her to leave school and become a breadwinner for the family. She never married, but made the Congregation the love of her life.

Mattie was one of four children of the Religious School of the Congregation who took part in the dedication of the Friendship Street Synagogue at the northwest corner of Foster Street in 1891. It was the first Jewish Synagogue erected in Providence, and the second in the state. Isaac Mayer Wise, the founder of Reform Judaism, participated in these exercises. She was confirmed in 1896 at the age of fifteen and immediately thereafter sat in for a year watching Rabbi David Blaustein teach a class. At the end of the year, she was given a class and was a teacher for many years thereafter. When, at the solicitation of Isidor Strauss, Rabbi Blaustein left Providence in 1898 to become Director of the Hebrew Educational Alliance in New York, the congregation was without the services of a Rabbi for a year. Mattie was one of three high school children who conducted the Sunday School, a service which she performed alone on many such occasions in the years that followed.

At the suggestion of Rabbi Blaustein, she was one of three children who gathered books to start a library. But it was Mattie who made the library her special interest from that day to the day of her death. Rabbi Henry Englander came in 1905 and Mattie, still teaching in the Religious School, instituted a system for the library. Rabbi Englander organized the Temple Alumnal Association of which Mattie became the first president. This association paid all of the incidental expenses of the school and raised funds with which it furnished the vestry and schoolrooms of the new Temple Beth-El on Broad Street in 1910. Working with Sigmund Lederer, Chairman of the Building Committee, she was chairman of the committee which bought the equipment and furnishings.

She continued teaching and conducting the Library under Rabbi Stern, who succeeded Rabbi Englander in 1910. When Rabbi Stern left in 1915, Mattie took charge of the school and prepared the Confirmation Class, which was confirmed by Rabbi Tedesche, who was succeeded by Rabbi Cohn. Mattie took a vacation but again she was called upon to prepare the Confirmation Class when Rabbi Cohn left in the middle of the year. Rabbi Englander, then secretary of the Hebrew Union College, came on especially to confirm the class. Rabbi Gup came in 1919 and Mattie acted as superintendent of the school for six months, when she resigned. Rabbi Braude came to Providence in 1932 and from the first day, he and Mattie were close collaborators in promoting the welfare of the congregation but most especially the Library.

Mattie Pincus shunned publicity. She was one of God's self-effacing little people who fill every gap without solicitation or title and preserve the continuity of our institutions. She visited the sick, lonely or friendless. She was not acquisitive, but a collector whom the scholar or historian appreciates. She had a feeling for history and saved and preserved what at the moment seemed trivial but for which the Jewish community is now in her debt. Among these are the records of the Montefiore Lodge Ladies' Hebrew Benevolent Association, the first Jewish charitable institution in Providence, those of the Ladies' Auxiliary, the photographs of the Confirmation Classes from 1896 on, the records of the Temple Alumnal Association and all of the issues of The Organ, the first Anglo-Jewish periodical published in Providence (1895-98).

The Organ was published from 1895 to 1898 under the auspices of Rabbi David Blaustein, who was its editor the first year. There were 23 issues divided into three volumes, with 11 issues in the first, and 6 each in the second and third. These numbers contain interesting and important historical data bearing upon the history of the Jewish community in the state. Mattie saved them and had them bound. In accordance with her wish, upon her death, they were deposited in the Archives of the Congregation. However, photostatic copies have been made for the Library of the Congregation and for the Rhode Island Jewish Historical Association for which David C. Adelman, Archivist of the Congregation, has compiled an index.

The Library of the Congregation grew but during the roaring twenties became a depository for castoff books of a miscellaneous and trivial nature. Under Rabbi William G. Braude, a scholar, singularly devoted to the Library, the incongruous matter was removed from the shelves and the distinctive character of the Library, as a collection of Judaica, was restored. This high standard has been maintained ever since.

On the twelfth of February, 1942, the Library observed its fiftieth anniversary. President Henry M. Wriston of Brown spoke, as did the late Adolph Oko, Librarian of the Hebrew Union College. Mrs. Arthur J. Levy, in reminiscing of the earlier days of the Library, mentioned, among other volunteer workers, Alphonse J. Lederer, who later became the Congregation’s most generous benefactor. At that celebration, heads of seven libraries in Providence were present. Miss Matilda Pincus, Librarian, prepared a special display, enriched by items of Jewish Lincolniana on loan from John Hay Library. At that time, the Library had over forty-one hundred volumes.2

Today the Library has over eighty-four hundred volumes in English, in Hebrew, in Yiddish, and in German, and approximately a thousand pamphlets. Among its more valuable items are complete sets of the Menorah Journal, Jewish Quarterly Review, old series, early numbers of Leeser’s Occident, Aufbau, several volumes of the Jewish Daily Bulletin, Monatsschrift Für Geschichte und Wissenschaft Des Judentums and a number of rare items of Jewish Americana. Purchases of Judaica by the Library are now being coordinated with those of the John Hay Library and catalogue facilities exchanged, so that students at Brown University and Pembroke College may have ready access to books in both libraries.3

Rapid growth of the Congregation’s sixty-four-year-old Library is 3Ibid.

anticipated in the years ahead, for the builders of Temple Beth-El have provided shelf space for twenty-five thousand volumes so that the Library may serve the needs of the city and of the state.

While the Library was being moved from Broad Street to Orchard Avenue, Matilda J. Pincus, its faithful librarian, died. The fruits of her labor are our inheritance.

JEWISH ETHICAL WILLS
by Dr. Harry Elkin, Executive Director Bureau of Jewish Education of Greater Providence

The publication of the holographic will of David Klibanoff of Providence, Rhode Island (R.I.J.H. Notes—June 1956) has given rise to the question of the place of the holographic will of a contemporary, simple, pious Jew in Jewish life. This will follows the form of the Ten Commandments in that it is composed of ten statements divided into two categories of five each and shows that here, in Rhode Island, an average Jew of the twentieth century maintained the link with Jewish history and Jewish tradition by following his forebears in the writing of a testament reminiscent of the concept of the ethical will.

The ethical will was usually prepared by the father as his final testament for the religious and secular guidance of his children. While written ethical wills can be traced back to the 12th century, oral counsel and guidance can be found as far back as Genesis: “For I have known him, to the end that he may command his children and his household after him, that they may keep the way of the Lord, to do righteousness and justice; to the end that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which He hath spoken of him.” (Genesis: 18:10)

Written ethical wills were particularly predominant in the Middle Ages. Characterized by great faith in God, these wills reveal the feelings of the Jews about Torah, piety, worship, the pursuit of justice and other religious and moral principles. Indeed the Jewish code of morality emerges clearly in all its splendor regardless of the origin or author of the particular will.

Excerpts of wills, compiled by Israel Abrahams in his Hebrew Ethical Wills, speak to us of the values Jews regarded deeply when they wrote their last words to their dear ones: “Let words of Torah be spoken at your table”; “It should be your constant desire to journey to the Holy Land”; “Be on guard against slander.” Thus we observe that the ethical will was not concerned with the bequeathing of worldly goods, but rather with the imparting of Jewish ideals and traditions.
NOTES

Aaron Lopez

We are indebted to Librarian-Editor Isidore S. Meyer of the American Jewish Historical Society for a letter from which we quote "I note that the picture on the cover [Vol. II, No. 1] which you describe as being that of Aaron Lopez and made available by courtesy of the owner, American Jewish Historical Association and the Frick Art Reference Library, was reproduced from a photograph of the painting before it was restored revealing the beautiful background of the harbor. "As you no doubt know, this painting was presented to the American Jewish Historical Society by the late Captain N. Taylor Phillips and exhibited at the Jewish Museum the first half of 1952. At that time there was a great deal of research done on the painting and although Captain Phillips, in his lifetime, stated that it was the painting of Aaron Lopez, experts of American paintings at the Metropolitan Museum of Art and elsewhere doubted very much that it could be a painting of Aaron Lopez who died in 1782. In our Publication. vol. XLI, March, 1952, p. 290, item 21, we describe the painting as being that of 'A gentleman of the Lopez Family,' painted by an unidentified artist of the early 19th century. The evidence upon which this was based was upon the costume, the style of the hair and the background of the picture."

Samuel and Jacob Lopez

Mr. Clarkson V. Collins III, Librarian of The Rhode Island Historical Society, has called our attention to an entry in the Master Roll of the privateer brig Yankee, which the Society recently acquired. This entry reveals that one Samuel Lopez, 17 years of age, was a ship's boy in the wardroom mess of the brig's sixth voyage in 1815. Examination of the records of seamen reveals that he was certified as a seaman on October 23, 1819 when he was 21 years of age, that he was of dark complexion and born in Providence. The same records also disclose that Jacob Lopez was certified as a seaman on April 13, 1816 when he was 15 years of age and that he, too, was of dark complexion and was born in Providence. Since these boys were born in 1798 and 1801 after the death of Aaron Lopez in 1783, it is obvious that they are not the sons of Aaron Lopez although it is probable that they are the Lopez boys who attended the school on Meeting Street. This Samuel is probably the one who married the daughter of Benjamin Tallman, Jr. (R.I.J.H. Notes, II, 1, p. 17 June 1956).
Does History Repeat Itself?

The Organ for December 17, 1897 mentions two resolutions which were introduced in Congress that “the Secretary of State be requested to demand of Russia that it accord the same rights and privileges to American citizens of the Hebrew faith as to other citizens.”

Ever since 1862, Russia persisted in discriminating against American citizens by refusing visas to American Jews and Roman Catholic and Protestant missionaries. The matter was the subject of negotiations enlisting the support of such men as President Theodore Roosevelt and Louis Marshall, one of the foremost constitutional lawyers of his day, and was the subject of debate until it came to a head under President William Howard Taft. Representative Harry Cutler of Providence introduced a resolution in the General Assembly of Rhode Island on March 30, 1909 calling for the abrogation of the Commercial Treaty of 1832 with Russia. The resolution passed unanimously on the next day. Other states did likewise. In December of 1911, after the passage of the Sulzer resolution in the Congress of the United States, President Taft denounced the treaty upon the advice of the leaders of his own party.

One of the participants in the negotiations with Russia was John W. Foster, grandfather of the present United States Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, who today countenances discrimination by Saudi Arabia against American Jews. Under the leadership of United States Senator Lehman, the United States Senate unanimously adopted a resolution on July 25, 1956 in which it declared that “any attempt by foreign nations to create religious distinctions among our citizens in the granting of personal or commercial success or any other rights otherwise available to the United States citizens generally is inconsistent with our principles.” This action is in the tradition established by its action in 1911 when Louis Marshall said of continued negotiation, “it might find the conscience of America growing ever more faint until from sheer weariness gradually we will read into this treaty an acquiescence with the Russian doctrine of discrimination among citizens and a discrimination among men by reason of their faith.”

“There Is Nothing New Under The Sun”

The quest for water has been of paramount importance to the development of society. For some time the attention of the world has been focused upon the Lowdermilk plan to divert the waters of the Jordan...
River in Israel to make the arid Negev desert bloom again. A recent German refugee in Israel now proposes to accomplish this purpose less expensively by removing the salt from sea water.

The conversion of sea water to obtain fresh drinking water was the subject of experiments in the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries. And in 1791, Jacob Isaacs, a Jew and a resident in Newport, petitioned the House of Representatives of the United States for an opportunity to offer his process to the Government. The petition was referred to Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson, who with three other scientists witnessed operations by Isaacs over a period of five days. The results were satisfactory but offered little advantage over processes then in use. Poor Isaacs returned to Newport, a poorer but wiser man like many an inventor after him.

CHARTERED ORGANIZATIONS

Originally corporate charters were obtained from the legislature. In 1893, the Secretary of State was granted the power to issue charters in accordance with the provisions of the General Laws. The Secretary of State issued annual reports thereafter until 1921 in which he listed the names of the petitioners and the corporations to which he issued charters. These appear in the indices of the Acts and Resolves together with those granted by the legislature. After 1921, only the legislative charters appear in the indices. Consequently we have discovered omissions in the published list (June 1956) as well as amendments; as follows:

May 1, 1902
        Eastern Curtain Manufacturing Company

JEWISH FAMILY NAMES

Surnames of Jews were readily identifiable in the nineteenth century but one unfamiliar with the history of the local Jewish community might easily overlook Jacob Briggs, George Davis, John Nelson, Morris Thompson and John Williams. Faulty spelling also presents difficulties to the uninitiated. Thus William Wolen appears as a witness in the United States Court for David Bachrach under the name “Wonon” (p. 13), for Louis Dakovsky as “Wolín” (p. 20) and in the State Court for Morris Sbinovitz under the name “William Nilian” (p. 68). His name is correctly spelled as “William Wolen” as a witness for Morris Thompson (p. 51) in the United States Court.

It is our present intention to continue to publish early Jewish family names in the cities and towns of Rhode Island to 1900 inclusive. The division into five-year periods shows the growth and distribution of the community.
