NEW YORK — Justice Justine Wise Polier of the Domestic Relations Court of New York warned Jews in this country last week against the danger of "detachment."

Mrs. Polier was guest speaker during the Sisterhood Sabbath service of Central Synagogue.

Praising the freedom of Jews in the United States, Mrs. Polier said there were still people "who wish to escape their Jewishness because they are unhappy with the demands of orthodoxy and tradition." For some, she explained, this freedom means "false assimilation and running away from one's self."

Mrs. Polier also expressed concern over "the danger of American materialism to the Jewish conscience." Equating Jewish and American materialism, she asked that there be an end to "the rush to the gilded ghettos of suburb or city."

Jews must always be aware of their own heritage with its concepts of justice and equality in their relationships with other human beings, she went on.

She mentioned "a certain Brooklyn judge who railed against another group—the Puerto Ricans"—and said he must expect criticism for forgetting his Jewish values. In an interview after the service she identified him as Judge Samuel Leibowitz.

Devotion to the Jewish community and pride in Israel do not prevent Jews from being loyal Americans, Mrs. Polier said, adding: "Just as there is more than one kind of freedom, there is more than one loyalty in life."

Describing the change in the position of the Jewish community between her generation and that of her father, the late Rev. Dr. Stephen S. Wise, Justice Polier said:

"Jews are becoming at home in America. They can now add the richness of their past to the symphony of American life."

Birds Return To Israel In Wake Of Reforestation

NEW YORK — Long-absent birds are returning to Israel in the wake of large-scale land reclamation, reforestation and resettlement.

The ecological gains have been noted since about 1900, according to Walter W. Ferguson, a naturalist and artist, who has described his findings in the current issue of Audubon Magazine.

He said millions of trees planted and managed by the Jewish National Fund have, incidentally, offered refuges and nesting sites for jays and woodpeckers.

Laws have been enacted to protect both birds and eggs and conservation is being taught in schools.

Conservationists believe that the greatest single factor in losses of wildlife was the destruction of forests in the eastern Mediterranean under the Ottoman Empire.

Bureau Of Jewish Education To Hold Community Conference

A state-wide Community Conference on Jewish Education, sponsored by the Bureau of Jewish Education of Greater Providence, will be held Wednesday at 8 P. M. at the Meeting Hall of Temple Beth El. This Conference will report to Providence on the first national study on Jewish education conducted in the United States by the American Association for Jewish Education, under the direction of Uriah Z. Engleman who surveyed Jewish education in Providence in 1951.

The Conference will take the form of a panel discussion on the various areas of Jewish educational endeavors as probed by Dr. Engleman and his staff. Panelists include Irving Brodsky, Mrs. Nathaniel Gouse, Murry M. Halpert, Daniel Jacobs, Sherwin Kapstein is moderator of the panel. Alter Boyman, president of the Bureau, will bring greetings to the Conference and Bernard J. Margolis is chairman of the Conference. Committee members serving with Mr. Margolis in addition to the

The survey which will be discussed is the first of such scope on Jewish education ever undertaken by Jewish people in any community. It took seven years to complete, during which time thirty-three communities in the United States were studied. The cost of the Survey was a quarter of a million dollars.

Parents, school board members, professionals and community leaders are invited to attend the Conference and various organizations throughout Rhode Island are invited to send their representatives. Follow-up reports in individual schools and organizations are planned after the Conference.

Report Ben-Gurion Proposed New Efforts To Reach Settlement

WASHINGTON—Premier David Ben-Gurion's main purpose in visiting Washington earlier this month was to propose that the Big Four at their summit meeting launch a new effort to bring about some kind of Arab-Israeli settlement says Dana Adams Schmidt in the New York Times.

The Israeli leader, according to diplomatic informants, offered four arguments in support of his proposal:

Period of Calm

First, the Middle East — local incidents and alarms by President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt notwithstanding — is moving into a period of relative calm.

Second — some fiery speeches notwithstanding — time has in the last decade somewhat muted Arab-Israeli hostilities, thus producing an atmosphere favoring a renewed effort at settlement.

Third, if nothing is done to take advantage of circumstances favoring a settlement, other forces will take hold favoring renewed conflict. Mr. Ben-Gurion saw a growing danger not only in the volume of arms in the hands of the United Arab Republic (and to a lesser extent in the hands of Iraq) but also in the fact that the Arab armies are growing more skilled in the use of these weapons.

Fourth, effective international action in the Middle East requires joint action by the Western powers and the Soviet Union, as was the case when Israel was born. Action by the Western Powers alone, or by the Soviet Union alone, will never prevail, Mr. Ben-Gurion argued.

At present most of the arms flowing to the Arab republic from the Soviet bloc, according to Mr. Ben-Gurion's informants, are spare parts rather than new weapons. Egyptian officers who went to the Soviet bloc for training courses have been returning, and Egyptian forces are gaining in the ability to use tanks and aircraft in both small-scale and large-scale operations, he said.

Secondary Purpose

Mr. Ben-Gurion's secondary purpose, the informants said, was to see Chancellor Adenauer. He discussed the possibilities of greatly increased trade between Israel and West Germany when the payment of German reparations to Israel ends. Although payments are not officially due to end until 1963, Israel has drawn ahead of her reparations account, so payments are down to about $30,000,000 a year.

United States official reaction to the Israeli Premier's ideas was interested but non-committal. Since he was here, however, the

Experts Scrutinize Israel's Plans For Harbor At Ashdod

TEL AVIV, Israel, — Experts from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development began scrutinizing last week Israel's plans for a new Mediterranean harbor at Ashdod.

They also examined plans for enlargement of the ports at Haifa and Elath and for damming up part of the Dead Sea to increase potash production.

Israel has applied for World Bank loans for these projects. The sums she is seeking have not been disclosed. However, the port development is expected to cost $64,000,000 and the potash project $42,000,000.

The experts are economists, engineers and technicians. The team is headed by G. Stewart Mason, who is in charge of the Israeli desk at the World Bank. The experts will make their recommendations to Eugene E. Black, president of the bank.

Mr. Black has discussed the application with Israeli officials in Washington and is due in Tel Aviv in May for further meetings.

Trade Rise Envisaged

Israelis feel they have a strong claim on the World Bank. The bank approved a $56,000,000 loan to the United Arab Republic for widening the Suez Canal, although Israeli cargoes are barred from that international waterway.

Israel's five-year development plan envisages an annual 17 per cent increase in gross national product (Continued on Page 4)

Portrait Of A Murderer

By Alfred Werner

Several of the men who, in the Third Reich, were lords over the life and death of millions have, as prisoners of the Allies, written auto- biographies in captivity. The most valuable is, perhaps, Rudolf Hoess' "Commandant of Auschwitz" (World Publishing Co., 285 pp., $4.50)—not because it reveals any facts not previously known (it fails to do so), but because it is the confession of an ordinary man: the little man who, given an order, will execute it to the full satisfaction of his superiors, without ever questioning the wisdom or morality of that order. More be- cause of his capacity for ceaseless work and his absolute reliability than for any intellectual brilliance (which he did not have), Hoess rose from the ranks of simple SS man to become chief of the most dreaded concentration camp, a position that enabled him to destroy, in one way and another, a total of three million people.

Alfred Rosenberg, in his Nurem- berg cell, could forget his role of accused and, in the defense material prepared for his trial, become again the "lofty" ideologist, giving "pre- cious" advice to the Western powers. Judging by his writings (published posthumously as "Mem- oirs of Alfred Rosenberg") Nurem- berg prisoner Rosenberg vainly hoped that the tribunal would treat him, the ex-Reich Minister, as a philosopher and acquit him (and, perhaps, even find for him a sine- cure at one of the universities). Hoess, however, harbored no illu- sions as to his final fate. After being interrogated in Nuremberg, he was handed over to the Poles who—as he expected while writing his auto- biography in a Polish prison—con- demned him to death. (He was executed in April 1947.) Far from expecting to impress the judges in his favor, Hoess, it seems, wrote an utterly candid story, partly as a catharsis for his unendurable guilt, and partly to occupy himself, for this glutton for work could not bear the inactivity of prison-life.

Were he alive now Hoess would be sixty. In the Bonn Republic (and in Eastern Germany, we surmise) men of this age, and older, are playing a very important role since many of those born forty or fifty years ago were killed in the war. Quite a few German educators, jurists, civil servants belong to the age class of Hoess and, like him, were ardent Nazis, yet were "de- nazified" because they had not been catapulted into jobs as conspicuous as the one held by Hoess. In essen- tial traits, they may be very much like him: schizoid creatures—order- ly, reliable, hard-working, ex- cellent family men, nature-loving, fond of children and animals, and at the same time unthinking robots, slavish respecters of authority, ready to execute any command, even if it should violate all moral principles they had acquired.

Hoess tells us that he came from a very religious Catholic family in southwestern Germany, and that his parents desired him to train for the priesthood. But when the First World War broke out, he wanted to be a soldier, and after several unsuccessful efforts to en- list in the German Army, he was eventually able to conceal his age and join the same regiment in which his father and grandfather had served. He saw action in the Middle East and was decorated for bravery.

He would not give up soldiering after the armistice and became a member of one of the Freikorps, para- military bands that, with the tacit blessing of the German Republic, tried to retain for the fatherland whatever territories in Eastern Europe had been formerly occupied by the Kaiser's soldiers. These Freikorps organizations served, as it were, as academies where follow- ers of the young Hitler and other ultra-nationalists learned how to treat their enemies with the most ruthless brutality, and it was there that some of the most notorious concentration camp torturers got their "training."

Hoess joined the Nazi party in 1922, but did not play any signifi- cant role until 1934. This was due not to a lack of "qualities" valued by the Hitlerites, but because Hoess was imprisoned for several years for his participation in the shocking murder of a man considered a "traitor" by the Rightist hotspurs. In 1934 he was urged by Himmler to join the SS (the dreaded black- uniformed Elite Guards) and to ac- cept an administrative position at the Dachau concentration camp. From 1938 to 1940 he was adjutant to the chief of the Sachsenhausen concentration camp, and in 1940 his career reached its climax when he was appointed the commandant of Auschwitz.

Hoess' autobiography contains many detailed descriptions of bes- tialities committed at these three camps, but little that has not been known before. The book's merit—if this term can be used at all—does not lie in gruesome revelations of life and death in the Third Reich. Instead, it is of great value as the self-revelation of an average man who was anything but a sadist, one who, in a different milieu (say, in the United States) might have be- come a successful farmer. In the Germany of the Twenties and Thir- ties, however, circumstances made him the pliable tool of murderers, and finally a mass-murderer him- self. Unquestionably, he tells the truth where he says that it made him "shudder" to see prisoners beaten by guards. One day he had to execute an SS man who had com- mitted a blunder: "I was so agitated that I could hardly hold the pistol to his head when giving him the coup de grace."

But he had sworn loyalty to Hitler, and whenever he was tempted to resign his embarrassing job he always recalled, in time, "my oath of loyalty to the SS and my vow to the Fuehrer." He was upset by the way his superior Ficke at Dachau maltreated prisoners, yet at the same time grateful that his own hatred against "dangerous enemies of state" was stirred up by his example. He admired his next chief, the Commandant of Sachsenhausen: "He was a perpetual example to me of how, in the SS, 'hard necessity' must stifle all softer emotions."

Reading this volume, one under- stands how Nazism could conquer a nation as intelligent and civilized as the Germans, for it was in Germany (and in Japan) that independent think- ing and acting by the individual citizen had sunk to a dangerous low. A hundred years before the first concentration camps, Heinrich Heine had ridiculed the servility of the average German: "And still they stalk as stiffly about/As pokers, straight and slick,/As though, once beaten well with it,/ They'd ended by swallowing the stick." Unfor- tunately, this was true not only of simple men like Hoess. The German generals had enough power in the Thirties to oust Hitler, and some of them were, indeed, disgusted with his regime. But as diplomat Ulrich von Hassell, one of the outstanding Germans to plot against Hitler, sadly put it in his diaries: "These men have technical knowledge and they are courageous physically; but they have no civil courage. They lack the self-assurance and the universal views that come from real culture."

Von Hassell and other martyrs had to find out that their com- patriots had been trained too long, not only to obey authority, but also to believe whatever authority pro- claimed. Like a parrot, Hoess re- peated what the party philosophers had shouted into the ears of seventy million Germans: "The destruction (Continued on Page 7)

Senator Javits Helps To Bring Polish Widow To U.S. As Visitor

NEW YORK — Leokadia Mikolajkow will make her visit here after all.

The U. S. Immigration Service said last week that Mrs. Mikolajkow has been approved as a temporary visitor. But the about-face by our embassy in Warsaw, after a year of a thumbs down attitude, took a nudge from Sen. Javits.

Mrs. Mikolajkow, 52, is a widow who lives in Debica, Poland. She has been trying to arrange a visit to this country to see people who are indebted to her for their very lives.

Mrs. Mikolajkow and her husband, Alexander, a physician, both Catholics, sheltered 13 Jews in their attic for more than two years of the Nazi occupation—in a house next door to the Gestapo station. Two months ago the New York Post described in detail the experience of those years.

She applied to our embassy last April but was denied permission because she mistakenly said she might stay here permanently. Actually she had no such intention. Her two sons are in Debica and she has no plans to leave them.

In a second visit to the embassy she made it clear that she would not remain in the U.S. once she got here, but the verdict still went against her.

One of the people Mrs. Mikolajkow helped, now a rabbi in Brooklyn, worked feverishly to get approval for her visit so she could meet "the additions to the original 13" who now number 31.

He wrote to The Post and to Sen. Javits for help. The Senator, after making inquiries, moved to aid the heroic Polish widow. It was to Sen. Javits that the Immigration Service broke the news of the approval.

The rabbi, who for personal reasons asked The Post to withhold his name, was almost speechless with joy when he was informed that the widow's visit had been approved.

The rabbi's wife who has carried on a correspondence with Mrs. Mikolajkow over the years was thrilled at the news.

She explained that Mrs. Mikolajkow was a school nurse and that the plans were for her to come over here after school closes and spend the summer months.

Sen Javits said that "Our country will be honored by the visit of Mrs. Mikolajkow. Her wartime deeds represent to Americans the heroism of the individuals who help to thwart the despotism of tyrants.

"I hope that she will come to Washington so that I may express to her personally my gratitude for her personal acts of heroism."

idea has gained ground among higher-level officials that if the summit conference should fail to reach any agreement on Berlin or disarmament, some kind of accord on the Middle East might offer a way to save the conference from failure.

American analysts do not necessarily agree with Mr. Ben-Gurion's conclusions, but have found, as he does, that there is little fire just now to support the amount of smoke emanating from the Middle East.

Morton Smith Announces Merger Of Agencies

Morton Smith, president, has announced that the 20-year-old Lester D. Emers insurance agency has merged with Morton Smith, Inc., general insurance agency of 100 Medway St., and its subsidiary, Medway Marine Corp.

Consolidation of the businesses and their employees is effective April 1, the merged agency to operate under the name of Morton Smith, Inc. on Medway Street.

Mr. Smith will continue as president. Samuel Snow and Herbert J. Ortnor of the present Smith agency will retain the posts of vice president and secretary respectively.

Lester D. Emers, president of the Emers agency, will serve as treasurer of the merged firm, with Gerald C. Gindelman, formerly sales supervisor for Emers, as a vice president.

Acquisition of the staff of the Emers agency will increase the staff of Morton Smith, Inc. and its subsidiary from 11 to 20 persons.

Mr. Smith said the merged agency will be one of the largest general and marine agencies in New England, doing business in 21 states.

Restaurateurs Don't Mind When He Ruins The Tablecloths

NEW YORK — For ten years, Louis Oppenheim, a dress manufacturer and doodler, has been ruining tablecloths in midtown restaurants. But the restaurateurs and their employees love it.

Jan Mitchell, for one is so proud of his customer's work that he has pinned up an exhibition of the cloths in his Longchamps Rathskeller in the Empire State Building according to Ira Henry Freeman in the New York Times.

Mr. Oppenheim is an amateur with only two months' training in art school. He sketches rapidly and well in the academic style of magazine illustrations. He specializes in portrait heads of American Indians, African Negroes and primitive Asians, because they have picturesque features and headdress.

However, he also does portraits of public figures, of his tablemates, other customers, waiters and waitresses. The subjects usually take the drawings home as souvenirs.

"In my house at Barrington, Ill.," Mr. Oppenheim said the other day, hard at work on a Longchamps cloth, "I don't have a single picture of my own displayed. My work is not worth hanging. Unfortunately, I know what good art is. I never miss a Rembrandt exhibition, or a show of French Impressionists, particularly Toulouse-Lautrec."

All Meals in Restaurants
Mr. Oppenheim is proprietor of the Strand-Woodstock Dress Manufacturing Company of Barrington. He spends four months of each year in New York on a selling campaign. Being a bachelor, he takes all his meals in restaurants. Being a doodler, he decorates a table cloth or napkin at each meal.

Why then did he not become an artist instead of a business man? "Because I had to eat and support my family from the time I was a teen-ager," he replied. "I attended the Chicago Art Institute classes for two months when I was 14. Then I had to make money."

"Now I am 60 and do $2,500,000 business a year. But in the last forty-five years, I don't think I have lived a single day without sketching. When I was a delivery boy, I used to deface my packages with sketches of other passengers on the street car. I drew on blank patches of wall posters, menus, hotel stationery, anything. Nowadays, I carry a sketch-book and draw characters I see about town and on vacation trips to the West."

Mr. Oppenheim's media are pencil, charcoal and pastels. The eight cloths in the Longchamps show, in black and white and colored pencil, include memory portraits of President Eisenhower, Premier Khrushchev and Chancellor Adenauer; a Navajo Indian on a pony, an Eskimo woman with a papoose on her back, and a barbaric African girl, for which one of his Illinois seamstresses posed.

Despite his artistic talent, Mr. Oppenheim does not design his dresses.

"I can't be bothered," he said. "Art work takes all your time but doesn't pay anything. I'm glad I'm not an artist."

Urges Liberalization Of Immigration Laws

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower called last week for a sweeping liberalization of immigration laws that would end racial and national quotas and provide special admission for victims of religious persecution.

Mr. Eisenhower requested legislation that would bring 308,000 immigrants into the country annually instead of the present quota of half that number. The immigration limit would be based on the 1960 census rather than the 1920 census. The 1920 census still governs immigration quotas. Provisions would be added to provide a haven especially for victims of political and religious persecution.

Opposition to the proposal developed in Congress immediately. Rep. Francis E. Walter, Pennsylvania Democrat, said it had no chance to gain congressional adoption. Rep. Walter is chairman of the House Immigration Subcommittee.

Portrait Of A Murderer

of internal enemies of the state is just as much a duty as is the destruction of the enemy from beyond the frontiers, and such action can therefore never be regarded as dishonorable."

Duty above anything else. It is tragic that a man, awaiting execution, should find solace in the fact that he had been a hard-working, loyal slave: "I always carried out my duties carefully and conscientiously to everyone's satisfaction." At Auschwitz, he gradually learned to hate the job he had to carry out, and—as many a man would do under such circumstances—he sought relief in drinking. Yet his Teutonic super-ego put a stop to this vice: "There was no question of neglecting my duties through overindulgence in alcohol."

Since alcohol was taboo, the unhappy man had to invent a substitute that would assuage his moral pain without sapping his strength. Like many, too many, Germans between 1933 and 1945, he took refuge in philosophizing, in rationalizing away whatever doubts may have crept into his soul. When Hitler gave the order for the mass-killing of Jews, he convinced himself and those who had come to him with their own doubts that the order was necessary "so that Germany and our posterity might be freed forever from their relentless adversaries." He considered himself a humanitarian because the gassing of people was less painful than other methods of murder, and devised technical improvements that made the gas chambers of Auschwitz more efficient than those of Treblinka.

The efficient, cold-blooded administrator was also a sentimentalist whose mawkish display of emotion is even more revolting than his narration of atrocities committed. He is charmed by the outlandish gentleness of the same Gypsies whom, in accordance with Hitler's wishes, he ordered to be exterminated. At one point he watched two little children absorbed in play, and had to command his police to remove them to the gas chambers: "My pity was so great that I longed to vanish from the scene; yet I might not show the slightest trace of emotion." Greater than his pity was his self-pity; he was so upset by the dirty work he had to perform at Auschwitz that "often, at night, I would walk through the stables and seek relief among my beloved animals." But he found comfort in the sweet thought that, just outside the camp, his wife and children lived very, very well in a lovely home set amidst a flower garden.

In 1943, Hoess gave up his post at Auschwitz to hold another administrative job related to concentration camps until the end of the Hitler regime. Advised by Himmler to hide in the remnants of the German navy, he managed to live undetected under a false name for almost a year. He was found and arrested by British police as late as March 1946. Since the scene of his most conspicuous crimes, Auschwitz, was located in Poland, he was, after a brief imprisonment at Nuremberg, handed over for prosecution to the Polish regime.

Did Hoess, as he approached the end of his memoirs, and of his life as well, see the light of truth and repent, the way Reich Minister Hans Frank accepted his guilt? Alas no. He remained confused to the end. More precisely, he remained a bundle of unresolved contradictions. While he was able to distinguish between good and evil, he would not commit himself and preferred to see himself as the Little Man who carries out all orders:

"Whether this mass extermination of the Jews was necessary or not, was something on which I could not allow myself to form an opinion, for I lacked the necessary breadth of view."

Occasionally, he had a flash of insight into the sources of the vast German and European tragedy:

"I can see that these leaders (the Nazi leaders), by means of exceptionally effective propaganda and of limitless terrorism, were able to make the whole German people so docile and submissive that they were ready, with very few exceptions, to go wherever they were led, without voicing a word of criticism."

But he does not feel that Nazism itself was wrong, and he does not regret his own stand—or rather lack of stand—in the past. Instead, he finds extenuating circumstances for himself: "Unknowingly, I was a cog in the wheel of the great extermination machine created by the Third Reich. . . ."

"Commandant of Auschwitz" should be read by all who still fail to understand how the same Germany that produced a Kant and a Schiller could also produce a Himmler and a Hoess. But Kant's Categorical Imperative ("Act as if the basis of your act were to become through your will a universal law of nature") never bothered the thousands of intellectuals and half-intellectuals who learned to do as they were told, and later on expected others to carry out their orders with the same blind obedience. Schiller did, indeed, exclaim, "Eine Grenze hat Tyrannenmacht—there is a limit to the tyrant's power—but the average German, I am afraid, had his backbone broken by Friedrich II and Bismarck and the Kaiser so that he finds it hard to revolt even when his conscience urges him.

It remains to be seen whether the English translation of Hoess' autobiography will have many readers in this country fifteen years after the last murders at Auschwitz. To the layman, the book offers little that he has not learned from the scores of volumes on Nazi Germany that appeared immediately after the end of the war. But it is obligatory reading for psychiatrists, criminologists, political leaders, and for all concerned with the fate of postwar Germany. For the real danger to democracy lies in those little men a la Hoess, who worship "order" and do not care how it is achieved. (Reprinted from Congress Bi-Weekly)

Reunion Of The Living

NEW YORK — Auschwitz as it was then, 17 and 16 and 15 years ago, still is imprinted upon them, on their forearms in tattooed blue numerals and, invisibly but no less indelibly, on their minds and hearts and memories.

That was the price of admission—that and $10—as approximately 500 former inmates of the Nazi concentration camp gathered for their first mass reunion since May 3, 1945, the day of liberation, reports an article by Fern Marja in the New York Post.

The quick and the dead were present, for those who survived talked of those who had not—of parents, children, wives, sisters and brothers exterminated by the Germans with the ruthless efficiency that wiped out 3,000,000 lives and made Auschwitz epitomize forever man's inhumanity to man.

The official motivation for the meeting at the Concourse Plaza Hotel in The Bronx was the launching of a scholarship fund for the children of Auschwitz' victims.

That bridge into the future served also, inevitably, as a bridge into the past.

The one-time slave laborers of the Germans, older and heavier than when they parted last, many with the second families they have acquired since their release, seized the hands of friends who had shared the terrors and tortures of Auschwitz-Buna, a single male compound where 200,000 had walked in and 10,000 had walked out.

They talked in German and English and Yiddish and Polish and Hebrew. They clapped each other on the back and beamed. They hugged each other and wept. They punched each other in delight and shock, their voices whipped by the excitement of high emotion.

The evening began as they lined up to sign a scroll expressing their thanks to the United Jewish Appeal for "the financial help and moral support" that had enabled them to "return to a life of dignity. . . ."

Morris Chudy, 42, a toy manufacturer who lives at 48 Post Ave., struck a hand to his brow. "Holzer!" he said. "Holzer!"

Charles Holzer, 39, a sales representative in Emerson, N. J., stared incredulously, then flung himself upon Chudy.

Almost at once, Fred Sarne, 45, a Philadelphia clothing shipper, and Kenneth Green, 54, a jeweler of 48 St. Mark's Pl., Brooklyn, crowded around them with exultant cries of recognition.

There was a quick babble of conversation. "I am shaking," Chudy said. "Seeing these boys again in this condition is out of the world. When I saw them in 1945, I weighed 90 pounds. I was bones and rags. Now I weigh 160. Our heads were shaved. Now you look at a man and you say, 'Is it him or not him?' Then you say, 'Yes it is him.' And right away they say, 'Do you remember. . . ?'"

"Chudy," Holzer said, and he touched his friend's shoulder, "you were there when my father died in camp. . . ."

"Unger!" Fred Lempko of Chicago shouted across the room, and two more men rushed together. Within seconds they exchanged biographical data and addresses, interspersing English and Yiddish.

"The ganze time together in Auschwitz," explained Lempko, 53, "he was my barber. When I see him, it's like seeing my brother."

Leo Unger, 40, of 1924 Loring Pl., The Bronx, still a barber, smiled shyly.

The survivors of Auschwitz sang the Star Spangled Banner and the Hatikvah, fumbling for the words. Then a rabbi spoke and Cantor Aron Beidner of Beth Jacob Congregation in Norwich, Conn., who had himself been a prisoner at Auschwitz, recited the solemn memorial for martyrs, El Mole Rach-amim.

The survivors of Auschwitz, many of the men wearing yamulka's, the light from the candles on each table flickering over the faces, chanted the Kaddish, the prayer for the dead. "Yisgadal," they began, "Yiskadash shme rabo. . . ."

The rabbi prayed. When he had finished, the lights went up and then, suddenly, small groups clustered where six of the company in different parts of the room had fainted. . . .

'Mr. and Mrs.' Year For Providence

In the past, there have been "Man of the Year" awards and "Woman of the Year" awards, but if present developments are any indication, 1960 will go down in Providence history as the year of the "Mr and Mrs" awards. For the "Mr and Mrs" teams active in the 1960 Israel Bond campaign in Rhode Island are likely to outnumber solo participants. And in cases where a "Mr" or a "Mrs" are not working as a team, they are still active in the campaign, in individual capacities.

The "Mr and Mrs" enrollment is an ample one, with the list growing longer almost daily. Prominently displayed on this list are the names of Stanley Grossman, who is serving as general chairman of the campaign, and his wife Hazel Grossman, who has recently been named to the chairmanship of the Women's Division.

The Chairmen of the second annual Diplommat Ball are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph K. Levy. The honorary chairmen are Mr. and Mrs. Merrill L. Hassenfeld.

In almost every instance, the Diplommat Ball committees are headed by "Mr and Mrs", as is the membership of the Host and Hostess committee.

And of course, there's another "Mr and Mrs" that rate attention in the 1960 scene here in Rhode Island — the guests of honor of the second annual Diplommat Ball — Israel Ambassador Michael S. Comay and Mrs. Comay.

Second Diplommat Ball To Honor Ambassador

Rhode Island's second annual Diplommat Ball, to be held in the Grand Ballroom of the Sheraton-Biltmore on Saturday evening, May 21, will honor one of Israel's leading statesmen and political experts, Ambassador Michael Saul Comay, Permanent Representative of the State of Israel to the United Nations. The Ball, so spectacular a success in 1959, is being repeated this year by popular demand.

Mr. Comay previously served for over three years as Israel's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Dominion of Canada.

When Israel was established as an independent state in 1948, Mr.

Comay was appointed Director of the British Commonwealth Division of the Israel Foreign Ministry. In 1952, he became the Assistant Director General of the Ministry. He served as a member of the first Israel Delegation to the United Nations in 1948 and again from 1954 through 1956.

Mr. Comay, who was born in Capetown, South Africa, in 1908, is a graduate of the University of Capetown, where he received his B. A. and LL.B. degrees. At the outbreak of World War II, he volunteered for military duty and served with the South African forces in Africa, the Middle East and Europe from 1940 to 1946, attaining the rank of Major as Intelligence Officer.

Upon his demobilization, Mr. Comay settled in Palestine in January, 1946, and became a member of the Political Department of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, serving in Jerusalem and at the United Nations. He carried out political missions in Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. During this period, he was also active in the Zionist movement, representing the Zionist Federation of South Africa.

A keen observer and analyst of contemporary history, he directs Israel's relations with other governments of the world at the United Nations.

Michael Comay

New Women's Division Chairman

Mrs. Samuel Michaelson, 1958-1959 Women's Division chairman, congratulates Mrs. Stanley Grossman on her acceptance of the 1960 Women's Division chairmanship of the Providence Israel Bond campaign.

Mrs. Philip Dorenbaum, Sponsor chairman, looks on. Mrs. Dorenbaum was hostess at Petite Luncheon and Planning Session which inaugurated the Women's Division sales program of the Bond campaign. Mrs. Arthur Einstein was chosen as co-chairman of the Women's Division.

Mrs. Grossman expressed her belief that women will play an increasingly large role in the success of the Israel Bond campaign. She pointed out that women are credited with a third of the more than $424,000,000 in Israel Bond sales since the inauguration of the Bond program in 1951.

A Year Of Anniversaries

1960 is a year of significant anniversaries for Israel.

As we celebrate Israel's 12th anniversary as a Jewish State on May 2, we also celebrate the 10th year of the Israel Bond campaign, which Prime Minister Ben-Gurion launched in the United States in early May of 1951.

The third significant event celebrated is the 100th anniversary of the birth of Theodor Herzl who was the founder of the Zionist movement that led to the creation of Israel as a sovereign State.

Theodor Herzl, inheritor of the mantle of the ancient Hebrew prophets, predicted not only the establishment of a Jewish State, but also its economic development, which he envisaged as being financed through publicly subscribed international loans. In effect he was the father of the Israel Bond Drive.

A Passover Message By Abraham Feinberg, President, Israel Bond Organization

For over 3,000 years the deliverance of the Jewish people from slavery in Egypt and their return to the land of Israel have been recounted in the Passover observance. In our days, the unraveled thread of Jewish history has been re woven into the fabric of freedom of the "old-new" State of Israel. Until a little more than a decade ago, Passover served as an inspiring and hopeful echo of past achievement; today, it embraces the drama of reconstruction and development that is unfolding in the landscape of Israel.

The realization of the ancient promise of Passover has ushered in a new era of fulfillment in which the State of Israel is fruitfully large areas of long-neglected land and is building industries and homes for the settlement and sustenance of hundreds of thousands of immigrant families. The present-day deliverance through development is the result of a modern covenant of practical faith expressed through the State of Israel Bond Campaign.

As we approach the Passover season we should do our share in helping Israel to achieve a greater degree of development so that next Passover we may be able to celebrate newer milestones in the living history of Israel.

Foods To Remember

An inquiry from a reader in the Boston area, no signature, came the other day. This reader wanted some suggestions for serving "a Sunday Brunch for a men's club" which her husband heads and takes his turn at entertaining at home. She added: "Many thanks for your recipes in the column--they are a God-send to this newly-wed." Our thanks for such sincere appreciation. Mrs. Anonymous from Mass. Columnists thrive on Reader Response! But, let's get down to suggestions for Brunch, easy-on-Newly-wed-Homemakers:

• MEN'S SUNDAY BRUNCH

Menu A: Chopped Herring Salad on Rye rounds with Fruit Juices, Cheese Mound and Lox on Salad Greens (Recipe below) Devilled Eggs, Black Olives, Pickles, Celery Sticks, Bread, hard rolls, butter and Damson Plum Jam or substitute, Freshly Baked Fruited Rolls and Coffee.

Menu B: Zesty Cheese Canapes, Fruit Juices of your choice or Tomato Juice, lemon wedges, Kipper Herrings Salad Platter, Potato Chips or French Fries, Apple Chip Fritters and Coffee.

Menu C: Sardine Salad on Pump-ernickle Rounds, Mixed Vegetable Juice or Tomato Juice, Casseroles of Limas and Frankfurters, Olives, pickles, chili sauce, celery sticks, etc., rolls, bread slices, rye crisp, etc., tea, black coffee and small cakes or cookies.

1. Cheese Mound & Lox on Salad Greens on individual plates are easily made by having the greens crisp in a large bowl ready to line plates. Place a ball of Cottage Cheese mixed with minced green pepper, shredded carrot, minced green olives, pimiento in desired amounts, combining with sour cream enough to handle easily with a scoop or cup buttered inside, in center of each plate. Of course, add salt and white pepper to suit the taste and be sure the cheese combination is well chilled before forming and placing. Garnish with strips of Lox curled around a cut of celery or a large green olive and held together with a toothpick. Makes for a color accent as well as taste thrill.

2. Fruited Rolls:
4 cups Bisquick
1 1/3 cups milk
1/3 cup sugar
1 teaspoon grated lemon or orange rind
1 cup finely chopped dried prunes
1 cup chopped seedless raisins
1 tablespoon juice of lemon or orange
1/4 cup fine cracker crumbs
1/4 cup finely chopped nuts
1/2 cup mixed cinnamon and sugar (more if desired)
1/2 cup melted butter or vegetable shortening
Pecan or Almond halves for topping Combine Bisquick with milk in which sugar has been dissolved, and work together to form a ball of dough. Turn out on a lightly floured board or kneading cloth. Divide into 2 or 4 portions for easy handling. Roll or pat out into rectangles 1/2-inch thick and about 6-inches wide. Combine grated rind, prepared dried prunes and raisins, fruit juice, crumbs, nuts. Brush each rectangle of dough with some of the melted butter, add some of the filling mixture down the middle. Sprinkle generously with cinnamon and sugar mixture. Roll long ends toward middle and place seam down. Now grease insides of muffin pans--you'll need 4 of the 9 well-pans for this number of rolls. Cut each of the 4 filled rolls into 9 even pieces and place, cut-side down, into the muffin wells. Top each with a nut half and press down with finger. Bake 18 to 20 minutes at 425 deg. F. or until nicely browned at edges. Remove from pans while warm. May be reheated if necessary. Yields approximately 36 rolls.

3. Zesty Cheese Canapes are made by spreading the following combination on crackers. Tam Tams, Rye Rounds, etc. Cream Cheese and Danish Bleu Cheese, in equal amounts with a little sour cream for smooth texture. Use bits (Continued on Page 16)

OPPOSES SCULPTURE

JERUSALEM — The Chief Rabbinate announced its opposition to the projected Jerusalem sculpture garden designed to house the $1,000,000 collection presented to the municipality by American producer Billy Rose.

After a meeting of the Chief Rabbinate Council, a spokesman said the project was "contrary to the spirit of Judaism and constitutes profanation of the name and character of the Holy City."

Nasser Denies Plans To Attack Israel

CAIRO — President Nasser of the United Arab Republic says that if Israeli Premier Ben-Gurion gets more arms from the West, "we also will get more arms."

Nasser made that statement in a meeting with 44 visiting U. S. editors and publishers.

They quoted him as saying relations between the UAR and the U. S. have improved in the last two years, but "if America supports Israel, there will be no room for better relations between us."

Nasser said Ben-Gurion is trying to convince the West that Israel is threatened by Arab states with Britain and France."

He denied the Arab states are planning to attack Israel.

"We will always reply to any aggression," Nasser said, "but we have no intention of launching aggression."

Asked about Ben-Gurion's proposals that he and Nasser sit down to talk peace, Nasser said: "Ben-Gurion said the same thing in 1956, when he was plotting aggression against us with Britain and France."

The Lyons Den

by Leonard Lyons

A group of New Yorkers dining at Nicky's Blair House discussed modern cases of Success, and the object lessons to be drawn from them as examples for children: First, the case of Toots Shor—who quit school and parlayed Booze and Deliberate Insult into a $1,500,000 capital gain. Then there are the Gabors. And, finally the ex-flight champ who was dallying with a lady when her blind husband entered the room and sprayed it with a gun. The champ fled across a field, fell into a hole—which turned out to be a gold mine.

Lawyers are advising Mickey Mantle, the Yankee hold-out to question the legality of the reserve clause so that he could start negotiating with the new baseball league...Charlton Heston, the Academy Award nominee, will rent the full-dress suit he'll have to wear for the event: "I wouldn't buy tails, while a strike is on"...In addition to fight promotion, Roy Cohn is backing shows: He's invested in "Christine" and in the off-Broadway hit, "The Prodigal."

Justice William O. Douglas was halted by a traffic cop while he was driving on the outskirts of Washington. The cop began: "Hey, you—don't you know the law?"...Douglas, the Supreme Court's dissenter, replied: "You can get a hell of an argument on that, either way."

When Jerry Lewis leaves his office, he places a life-size cardboard cut-out of himself behind his desk, to startle visitors. One of them put a sign over the cut-out: "I told you some day I'd flatten you"...Otto Preminger has found a role for himself in "Exodus"...Freddie Brisson, the producer, is negotiating with Natalie Wood and her husband, Roger Wagner, for their Broadway stage debut in his new show, "Under the Yum Yum Tree."

The Mexican government probably will ban the film production of "The Magnificent Seven," which is scheduled to be made near Acapulco. It's a matter of national sensitivity: The plot concerns Mexican villagers who hire a couple of clean-cut Texans to protect them from other Mexicans. The "Texans" are the Mongolian-born Yul Brynner and the German Star, Horst Buchholz.

Charles Bickford, the veteran screen actor, may return to Broadway next season in "Face of a Hero," the play starring Jack Lemmon...Laurence Harvey flew to London the other day for a 24-hour visit—to collect a prize and see his wife.

Two TV actors--Bob Mathias, the ex-decathlon champ, and Frank Gifford, the Giants' halfback--were at P. J. Clarke's recently. Gifford acknowledged his debt to Mathias: They starred on rival college teams, Gifford for USC and Mathias for Stanford. In the game which was to decide the Rose Bowl play, Mathias ran back a kick-off for the winning touchdown. "So Bob went to the Rose Bowl," said Gifford, "and I went to the East-West game--where the Giants saw me play, and drafted me. So, I owe it all to Bob's run."

Chuck Conerly, the 39-year-old quarterback for the Giants, was in N.Y. this week-end, to sign for next season...Tyrone Guthrie, director of "The Tenth Man," is Presbyterian. He attended a synagogue service, and said: "Gentlemen, our services at 'The Tenth Man' are staged better"...George DeWitt says he saw a modern TV western: The Indians waited at the pass, to ambush the New Haven RR train--and they waited, and waited, and waited....

Thornton Wilder is back from Europe where he worked on his new opera, and on his cycle of plays for the theater-in-the-round. He spoke of the problem with these shows, where little scenery is used, and quoted the "theory of conspicuous waste"...American audiences enjoy seeing big, expensive productions. This, said Wilder, was damaging at first to his memorable "Our Town," because theater-goers said: "They are just trying to save money on scenery."

of green pepper or parsley for topping. Mixture can be prepared in advance and chilled for spreading just before serving time. One cupful sufficient for 24 canapes.

4. Kipper Herring Salad Platter can be made very attractive by placing herrings right out of can on platters lined with shredded salad greens. Use tomato and cucumber slices in alternate ring and garnish further with slices of hard-cooked eggs, pimiento stuffed olives or Maslinas, strips of green pepper and celery sticks.

5. Apple Chip Fritters:
4 cups Bisquick
1 1/3 cups milk
1/2 cup sugar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
3 or 4 cups shredded tart apple
Combine to make a soft dough to which add, just before frying time, 3 to 4 cups finely chopped or shredded tart apples (tightly packed for measuring) and work together to make a heavy batter dough that will drop from a tablespoon and not spread too rapidly. Adding a little milk if necessary to form desired consistency of batter may be necessary. Have two or more frying pans ready with an inch deep oil over moderate heat ready then start dropping spoonfuls of batter mixture in. Fry till lightly browned on underside before turning. Lift out onto double folds of paper towels for draining excess fat. Dust the platters of Fritters with confectioner's sugar and serve warm. Can be reheated in a 400 deg. F. oven 5 minutes.

6. Limas & Frankfurters Casseroles are easiest of all main dishes. Fill casseroles with canned or frozen (thawed) limas, press frankfurters into top in wagon-wheel formation, sprinkle with warmed corn syrup or honey and bake 20 minutes at 400 deg. F. or until well heated through and sizzling.

By Revoke

It pays to be active in the bidding. By entering into the auction, even on slender values, one is often able to suggest a best defense or a profitable sacrifice, and strangely a light bid often has the effect of goading the opponents into going on too far. On this hand the laugh should have been on the light bidder.

Dealer South; North-South game:

North		West		East		South
♠	4, 3	♠	9, 7, 2	♠	A, J, 10, 6	♠	K, Q, 8, 5
♥	A, 8, 4, 2	♥	Q, 10, 3	♥	J, 9, 7	♥	K, 6, 5
♦	K, Q, J, 3	♦	A, 7, 6, 4, 2	♦	5	♦	10, 9, 8
♣	K, J, 8	♣	A, 4	♣	Q, 10, 7, 6, 5	♣	9, 3, 2

The bidding went:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1D	1S
1NT	2S	2NT	Pass
3NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

It is very questionable whether South had the values for his final effort, but by this stage it was clear that at least one of his opponents was relying on nuisance value rather than on the standard qualifications for his bid.

West began with the two of spades and East won with the ace and returned the six. The declarer ducked a heart to East, who continued with a third spade. Declarer now tackled diamonds and on the second round West won with the ace, East discarding the seven of clubs. West led the four of clubs: by this stage a club had been discarded from the table on the third spade.

East, it is true, was the more likely to hold the ace of clubs because of his overbid, but he was certain to hold the good spade, and if he won the lead the contract was defeated. This was a moment for boldness. South would lose points if he failed by even one trick, and so should risk going four or five down, undoubted, against the possibility of a spectacular gain. He could succeed only if East were kept out, and clearly the king of clubs was the one chance to do that. South's courage failed him; he played the jack from the table and went two down.

At four of the other five tables East-West were silent and North played in 1NT after South had responded 1S. At the fifth table two of the young school were in the East-West seats and they displayed an even greater degree of enterprise. Over 1D East bid 2D. This bid is generally reserved for very powerful hands, is game-forcing, suggests a first-round control in opponent's suit, and asks partner to bid his best suit and keep the bidding open to game. Some of the younger experts are now experimenting with the bid as a two-edged weapon whereby it can either be game-forcing or serve as a weak distributional double. The meaning is made clear on the next round.

Over East's bid of 2D, West did the best he could: he bid 2H. East made his meaning clear when he said Pass, but the defense attacked trumps and held West to four tricks for a score of 200 more than (Continued on Page 23)

Notes From The N. E. Hinterland

Why, then, this retreat to the cramped bosom of a small town? Why not the more spacious vistas of New York or Boston? Ah, but Buxton was not cramped by his lights—not cramped at all. And he proceeded to demonstrate the lure of small town life for him. Item: here he was a member of an old family with established status. (His father had been a judge.) His legal practice was good, even if he deprecatingly described himself as a "country lawyer." Item: his cultural life was surprisingly rich for he had been adopted by the faculty of the local college. He had a particular interest in art history, and he was often invited to lecture at the college on his specialty. Moreover, he was part of a social enclave of upper bohemians—religiously-mixed—who had their home base at the college. Would he be invited to lecture at the New School or at Columbia University? Not on your life. Item: there may be all those hills between Buxton and New York, but by superhighway they are only six or seven hours apart. So there are the periodic jaunts to New York for an orgy of play-going and gallery-haunting (and in between, a few foreign movies).

In other words, one doesn't have to choose between city and country. Without even the equivocation of the suburbs, you can have both. And so he sat, munching on a corned-beef sandwich in his Brooks Brothers suit, pleased with his life-style but not smug, alert and big-city sophisticated — a modest outpost of the Ivy League amid the sawmills and blue-jeans.

My last lecture took place in a good-sized city. The hotel had all the accouterments including bell-hops who were hardboiled professionals, adept in hustling tips. (I had been impressed in the smaller towns by the service people in whom the tradition of cheerful and willing service had not yet decayed.) The Jewish center was no more grandiose than the others. (None was housed in a new building; New England obsolescence was everywhere manifest.) The topic was the Catskills. (Lecturers need plenty of costume changes in their baggage.) It seemed strange to talk about the pleasure-domes of Monticello and Ferndale among these barren hills. And to those who had not been there—and a surprising number had not—it was all strange and exotic and tumultuous like some distant kingdom of the Khazars.

There was a coffee-and-cake buffet after the talk. A young woman, flamboyant and vivid, identified herself as a graduate of Brooklyn College. She was in the throes of a soul-wrenching problem. She was a wife and a mother—but also a part-time actress. For a few summers she had worked in summer stock hoping that this would exorcise the demons of restlessness within her. But that wasn't enough. Now New York beckoned. For her the small-town dream had not worked. What should she do?

Later we sat around the office of the executive director of the center. He was tired; it had been a long day. On the wall was a large map full of colored pins like some souvenir of a military campaign. It was, rather, a logistical map of the Hebrew school; children had to be picked up in every corner and cranny of the city. Would they ever have a new building?

He shrugged his shoulders. It's not a well-to-do Jewish community—just small merchants and working people who manage to get along.

The evening was over. I was driven to my hotel by an affable young man who had served as chairman. He was in business with his father; they sold tires and ran a few parking lots. Only last week, he told me, one of his assistants, a stock car enthusiast, had been killed in an auto race.

He described the young man's passion for speed with a certain remoteness but not without sympathy. As for himself, outside his wife and children, his life was anchored in the Jewish center. As a child he had a solid Jewish education, and he wanted to make sure that it was available for others. "If you'll pardon my French," he suddenly blurted out, "sometimes it gets to be a pain in the neck. You just don't get cooperation from some people. They talk and talk and do nothing."

The next morning I took the plane to New York—away from snowy tundra, and small-town yearning for Yiddishkeit, and restless young women with visions of grandeur on Broadway. When the plane took off, sure enough, the man in back of me made the inevitable gag about whether or not the plane would clear the trees at the edge of the airport.

URGED TO TAKE CARE
PARIS — French Jewish organizations were urged this week by the Representative Council of Jews of France against approaches of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev about the situation of the Jewish in the Soviet Union during his visit here. The council was understood to be anxious to avoid a situation developing in France similar to the one which occurred in the United States when Khrushchev visited that country last autumn. There were announcements that Khrushchev had agreed to a meeting but it never happened.

Africa Might Have Been Homeland Of The Jews

At one time, Africa—instead of what is now Israel—might have become the homeland of the Jews. When Czarist pogroms drove hundreds of thousands of Jews out of Russia before World War I, Britain's Colonial Secretary Joseph Chamberlain drew up a grant of 5,000 sq. mi., in what is now Kenya's white highlands, to serve as a Zionist refuge until the Holy Land should be opened to them. But a Zionist commission inspecting this temporary Promised Land took fright after being nearly crushed by stampeding elephants, surrounded by Masai warriors, and rendered sleepless by roaring lions. Shuddering "No, thanks," the commissioners hastily left British East Africa to the birds, beasts and black men.

Recently the Israelis were back in force in Africa—and enjoying it. This time they were not homeless Jews but bustling commercial travelers and dispensers of technical assistance and capital. Many a newly independent African state finds its own economic development problems strikingly similar to those Israel faced only a decade ago. But British and French interests find the Israelis are now moving in as fast as they themselves move or are pushed out. Items:

In Kwame Nkrumah's Ghana, the Ghana National Construction Co.—owned 60% by the government and 40% by the Israeli Federation of Labor—has consistently underbid the onetime top contractor, British-owned Taylor Woodrow. Its latest job: a $5,000,000 international airport at Accra.

In Nigeria, due to become independent in October, Israel's Water Resources Development Ltd. recently joined an ambitious plan for agricultural, industrial and municipal water development and Israelis will supervise twelve plantations of 1,500 acres each, patterned on Israel's cooperative farms.

In Sekou Toure's Guinea, which voted itself out of the French Community a year and a half ago, Israeli diamond interests formed a partnership with the government to market the output of Guinea's diamond mines.

Fewer Strings

The Israeli penetration of Africa is primarily economic, but it has political overtones too: in busily cultivating the new African nations, Israel naturally hopes for their support in the U.N. against Arab boycotts of Israeli products and Nasser's denial of the Suez Canal to Israeli cargoes.

For their part, newly independent Africans, needing and wanting help but leery of the hand offered by the old colonial powers, suspect fewer strings to Israeli assistance. As a mixed economy itself with a flair for socialist forms, e.g., the agricultural kibbutzim, Israel is also psychologically more in tune with smaller nations who think their problems so vast and their time so short that they do not trust free enterprise alone. Besides, says one Israeli official, "we are working on the same scale as other nations, and our shoes happen to fit them."

As many an African country can attest, it is proving a comfortable fit. When Ghana won her freedom from Britain three years ago, Israel's Zim Navigation Co. jumped in with a complete, ready-to-go merchant fleet—the Black Star Line—which saved Ghana so much in foreign exchange that the Nkrumah government recently was able to buy out Zim's 40% share. The Israelis are happy to sell out, and often wind up with a brokerage fee or a managerial contract. Liberia is employing Israeli construction firms on its new $3,500,000 Ducor Palace Hotel, which will be West

COUNCIL CORNER

by Jeff Davis

Provty, the Providence Temple Youth, is a co-ed group which deals with the religious, cultural and social aspects of teenage interests. The officers are Gene Baruch, president; Bruce Nelson, first vice-president; Paula Goldsmith, second vice-president; Judy Tanenbaum, recording secretary; Davida Millman, corresponding secretary and Karen Chernack, treasurer.

Later this month and in April, the group will attend two conclaves; one at Boston and the other at Worcester. Two delegates, also, will attend a National Pilgrimage to the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, Ohio, while, this summer, two others will attend the National Summer Institute at Zionville, Indiana.

In keeping with this regional spirit, Paula Goldsmith and Phil Weinstein are heading a committee to organize a conclave to be held here in Providence.

As a project for their "Mitzvah Program" the members sponsored a concert, the proceeds of which went to the relocation of a Negro church.

Provty meets bi-monthly at Temple Beth El.

Jews In Africa

Africa's finest, Ethiopia's Haile Selassie, who proudly claims some Jewish blood from a chance encounter centuries ago between King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, has hired Israeli engineers to build 77 miles of mountain road, and is thinking of getting Israelis to convert his slum-ridden capital, Addis Ababa, into a modern city. Israeli technicians are employed by many African nations to staff hospitals, train military forces, and produce experimental crops.

Sticking to Business

In African countries with large Moslem populations, the Israelis had to contend at the outset with pro-Arab sympathies. Remembering that they were guests, they stuck to business and to efforts that visibly helped the people, while Nasser in his Radio Cairo broadcasts offered his Moslem brothers little but hate. As one Israeli living in the Ivory Coast puts it, they found that "people will forget a lot of politics very quickly if you can outshine the next fellow at filling a need that helps people in the pocketbook."

In Ghana, government backbenchers recently expressed fears of Israeli domination. To leave no doubt of Israel's intentions, Israeli Foreign Minister Golda Meir toured West Africa last month, leaving behind her this promise, in the words of Israel's Ambassador: "We are not trying to establish ourselves in Africa. There are no Jewish settlements, no synagogues. As soon as our work of assisting is completed, we will move out and move on." (Reprinted from TIME Magazine)

DROUGHT CAUSES HARDSHIP

TEL AVIV — Omer Histadrut newspaper, declared the severe drought that has hit the country has affected all. The Histadrut organ urged Israelis to tighten belts by cutting down on luxury consumption and on "cultural" imports from abroad and by paying taxes and helping the Government.

they could have earned by their own efforts.

It seems to me to be a serious criticism of this new, and not as yet popular, convention that one exposes oneself too easily to a penalty double. I opened this article by saying that it paid to be active. There is, however, a very big difference between entering the bidding at the level of one and entering it at the level of two. It is a comparative rarity for the opponents to find their best spot by doubling a suit contract at the level of one; it is a common thing for them to look for their best score by doubling at the two level.

CONTEMPORARY ARTISTS SETTLE AT 30 BENEFIT STREET

Housed on the second floor of a building which just turned 100 years old this January, Contemporary Artists, Inc., for the first time in its history has permanent headquarters.

The art club which is now at the Art Center at 30 Benefit Street was formed in 1944 as a regular art group. But according to Nathaniel Swartz, vice-president of the group, there was a "lack of members and of interest."

In 1954, by relaxing their by-laws a bit and making the group independent it has become revitalized and has been flourishing. And with the rental of permanent quarters he feels that they are on the right way up.

Contemporary Artists has two kinds of membership — the artist members who paint or sculpt; and the associate members who are interested in art, are interested in learning more about art and wish to help encourage the painting membership.

There are sketching groups, informal work shops and an educational program in the form of lecture demonstrations held at the galleries which are open to members and guests only. To the layman these give an appreciation in art techniques. To the working artist these demonstrations are a means of visually satisfying his knowledge of other art forms.

Now in the process of enlarging their organization through the enrollment of more members, both artist and associate, they are determined to interest more people in art — particularly in the local artist.

Of the 110 works which were selected for the First Rhode Island Arts Festival last summer, 15 selected for hanging came from Contemporary Artists and of those, four won prizes.

The group plans to have shows without interruption. They plan at least four or five all-member shows, and several one or two or three man shows. In April there will be a Special Invitational Show to which will be invited those artists who had served as judges at former shows in the galleries.

Nehemiah Mark Puts His Spirit In His Sculpture

By CELIA ZUCKERBERG

"An artist is like an envelope — sometimes it may contain a check or an invitation to a wedding — sometimes it contains a summons to court." So Nehemiah Mark characterizes an artist.

Mr. Mark, who displayed his wood sculpture and who spoke at the Creative Arts Exhibit of Temple Emanuel on March 16 has been doing wood sculpting for 13 years.

Starting at the age of 57 Mr. Mark, who had been brought up as a Jewish scholar and teacher, has in the last 13 years produced more than a thousand pieces.

Original and delightful though Mr. Mark's work is, his personality is even more so. Asked for an interview he was happy to oblige for someone from the Jewish press. But the dates of his birth, where he studied and the usual ordinary facts — those could be found anywhere, he said.

His feeling about his work, he felt, was much more important. And Mr. Mark was right.

He is sure that in assessing his work, other people are, perhaps, better judges than he. He may inflate his accomplishments because of his ego, he says, or deflate them because of modesty.

When making a wood sculpture he often does not start with a definite goal in mind. He works from "one subconscious to another subconscious."

His work portrays Jewish biblical characters and a Jewish feeling. And he feels as though there is part of him in each piece which he makes.

One small piece (for which he had no specific name, but which he said is almost a self-portrait, not in features but in spirit) shows a difference in mood as it is turned.

There is a smiling face — as one turns it there is a face filled with sorrow. Another turn and there is an expression of "Go to blazes," as Mr. Mark puts it. Another turn, another expression.

An artist "grows out of his background to be useful to the whole community." He mentioned as men of this caliber, who were not simply artists for their own people but for the world, the Russian Tchaikowsky, the Italian Verdi, the German Wagner.

Speaking it seemed from personal knowledge, Mr. Mark says that a jovial person is usually a sad person; the joviality is a mask. He feels he has learned enough from the Torah and the Jewish religion to have an inner consolation for his sadness.

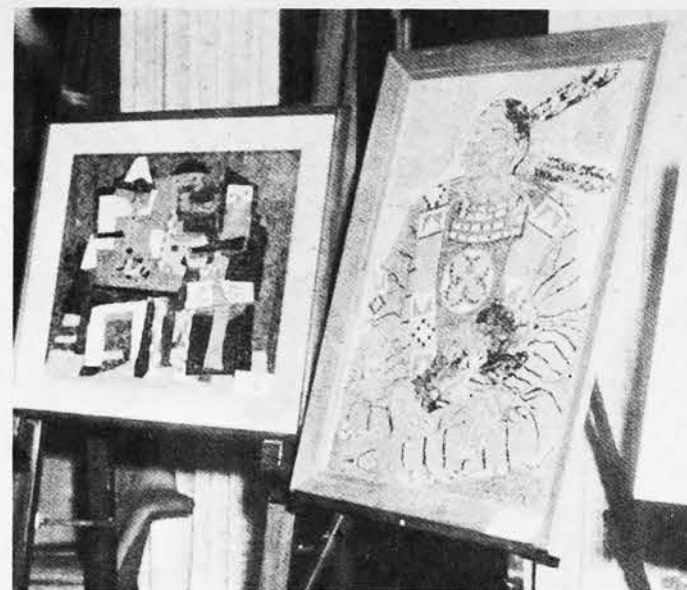

But, regardless of this rather gloomy statement, he asserts he still loves life and he obviously enjoys a bit of humor.

However he vigorously points out that there are two kinds of humor. There is the vicious, biting kind of humor which he dislikes in other people. And there is the humor which "is like sunshine — like a smile."

From the folder which speaks of Mr. Mark's work comes, "This artist's work reflects a panoramic array of Jewish lore and culture." Not only does his art show this, but it portrays Nehemiah Mark's humor, his sadness, his learning — it reflects Nehemiah Mark.

Shown below is one of the many museum pieces displayed at the Temple Emanuel Creative Arts Exhibit. This is the wedding dress of Rachel Rosenthal who was the first Jewish woman to graduate from Hunter College and who, in this dress was married in 1875 to Adolph Cohen, a leading merchant of Pawtucket, Rhode Island.

The Creative Arts Exhibit—a bi-annual affair held at Temple Emanuel — featuring work done by members of the Temple, drew a full house this year on March 16. Although Nehemiah Mark and his wood sculptures were the special feature of the evening, there were many local exhibits which drew the attention of those attending. These are just a few of the many and varied exhibits.

Mr. Mark's wood carvings all have a Jewish spirit.

MARKOVITZ' MAKE SCOUTING A FAMILY AFFAIR

By SYLVIA TIPPE

Enthusiasm, for almost anything, or anybody, can be caught by mere bystanders, and a genuine interest can often be kindled by this enthusiasm. This is the spirit that prevails when one is fortunate and can talk to two enthusiasts.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Markovitz, with their two sons, live at 154 Sixth St., in Providence, in a tastefully furnished apartment. Joe and Bernice, (the former Bernice Cohen, of Boston) are two individuals who typify what people often refer to as the "average American couple". In addition, their close alliance with their Temple, Beth Sholom, further identifies them, with their boys, as the "typical, average, American-Jewish family", as so often read and talked about today.

To persons who are close to the Markovitz', Joe and Bernice are really not just "typical" or "average" at all. They are examples of admirable parents, and at the same time, commendable citizens of their community.

Mrs. Markovitz recalled the time that a new Rabbi, Rabbi Tumin, came to Temple Beth Sholom, to take over his congregation, in 1956. At that time, to make the spiritual leader feel welcome, and so that he could meet some of his congregants, Joe and Bernice asked him to a "brunch" at their home, along with some of their friends and neighbors, and at this get-together, talk flowed along about many matters concerning some of the activities that a few parents wished could stem from Temple. Upon the suggestion of Mrs. George Strashnick, President of the Sisterhood, that day saw the beginning of what is now proudly known as "Cub Scout Pack #9," which has further developed along with "Boy Scout Troop #9".

With this start, the Markovitz' were caught up immediately, and of course, since there were two boys in the family, they tried their hands at Scouting. No one at the Temple knew much about this great movement. However, undaunted, Joe and Bernice, with a committee, jumped right into the organizing and into the self-education necessary to start a Pack. Thirty to thirty-five boys quickly gathered with the new Scout leaders. Four dens were the immediate result! Joseph became Cub Master, working with an excellent committee. The newness of this enterprise was a bit over-powering, and as a result, a good deal of the work fell to Bernice and Joe — who doing something, do it well, or not at all.

An interesting side-note is the fact that Mr. Markovitz was never a Scout himself — the group of boys that he chummed with as a youngster were not members either, and as a result, one boy didn't lead the others in this direction. Often one child's interest in some such activity is sufficient to spread the interest around.

This work with the Cub Scouts and the Scout Troop takes a great deal of time, but as Bernice discussed it, she remarked that even with Joe's very limited leisure time (he is engaged in conducting his own Fairlawn Spa, located a distance from home, on Mineral Spring Ave. in Pawtucket) he gladly drops anything in order to attend to the many details attached to his duties as the Cub Master of Pack #9, and as Committee Chairman of Boy Scout Troop #9.

Joe proudly related that after the first year of the start of the Cub Scouts, a group of boys was ready for a Scout Troop. About fifteen boys were graduated, and they formed the nucleus of Troop #9. In addition, about fifteen other boys from various parts of the city, enrolled with this Troop.

Mrs. Markovitz said that the Men's Club of the Temple sponsors both the Cubs and the Scouts, but that the Pack and the Troop both endeavor to support themselves totally. An interesting point, Joe emphasized, is the fact that during the first year the Scout Troop was formed, their Cub Scouts aided the Troop financially.

Mrs. Markovitz, who attended Jeremiah Burke High School in Boston, and Mr. Markovitz, a graduate of Hope High School, and the University of Rhode Island, can speak very proudly of their family: Morton, age 13, is a Star Scout, a recipient of the Ner Tamid Award, and a Classical High student, in grade 9B; and their alert son Steven, is in the 3rd grade at Summit Avenue School.

In 1959, Mort graduated to the Boy Scouts, and Steven was not yet old enough for the Cubs — this change in the status did not dim Joe's interest, and he remained in the same capacity as Cub Master, with Bernice working on the Committee with him.

Joe very enthusiastically talked about the splendid leadership of Scout Master Carl Zimmerman. In Joe's capacity as Scout Committee Chairman of Troop #9, he works with Mr. Zimmerman, and values his work immensely. This committee meets as the time warrants for special activities.

Bernice's Den includes 8 boys, her own Steven as one of these, with her able assistant and friend, Mrs. Edward Silverman. Steven's Den Chief is a young man named Henry Strashnick.

Today, four years after the beginning of Scouts and Scout activity at Temple Beth Sholom, there are still four dens, including the "Webelos" Den, which prepares the older boys for Scouting. Mort Markovitz is Leader of this Den.

Now, in the middle of the 1959-60 season, the Markovitzs had a great many events to recount. Bernice told of a "Rummage Sale" which was conducted by the Cubs, for which the children did most of the leg-work — picking up the old clothes, and hanging everything, with the parents actually just helping supervise the preparations for the sale, and the sale itself, of course. Enough money was cleared to help the Cubs in meeting their financial needs for the ensuing year's activities.

A couple of weeks ago, the Markovitz', with their committee, arranged for the "Blue and Gold Dinner", an annual banquet for Cub Scouts.

"Scout Sabbath" was another interesting and well-planned event. This celebration comes about the second week in February, during National Scout Week, and starts on a Saturday, and ends the following Saturday. Religious services are conducted at the various churches, synagogues, and temples, at which time Scouts are honored. At Temple Beth Sholom, the Scouts themselves participated in the services, conducted by Rabbi Jacob Freedman. This year, for the first time in the history of the Temple, the Scout's Religious Award, the "Ner Tamid," was presented, and the Markovitz' were happy and proud when their son, Morton, received this award.

There are many events that Joe and Bernice have helped to carry out in their work with their Pack, Den, and Troop. There is an annual picnic, usually held for Cubs, at Skeleton Valley, or Camp Yawgoog; trips are planned and supervised — the children have been taken to such interesting places as Newport (under the guidance of the U. S. Navy), to the Coca Cola Plant, Slater Mill, a T.V. station, Providence Journal Building, the Planetarium, a Bank, the Telephone Company, an ice-cream plant, etc. From this small list, it is obvious that much detailed planning must of necessity go into the working out of the programs.

Cub Master Joseph Markovitz attributes the success of Pack #9 to the splendid cooperation existing between the Committee, the parents, and the children. This year, Joe is enjoying the help of an outstanding committee under the chairmanship of Lou Kornstein, and a very capable assistant cub master, Lou Bilow.

In answer to a query as to how Mr. M., tied up in a 7-day business, working many nights until 11 P. M. could possibly devote as much time, effort, and energy to Scouting as he does, his reply was that he made the time for the things that he truly enjoyed doing. In this respect, there is no doubt whatever that Joe "truly enjoys" Scout work, and his contact with children, and with the many good friends he and Bernice have made.

The Markovitz', Joseph and Bernice, and Morton and Steven, are a well-coordinated, friendly group of people, loving each other, and making the most of a common bond so that not only do they work together, but they play together as well.

The Markovitz family might be modeling for the Boy Scouts of America as they have their picture taken: Morton in his Boy Scout uniform, Mrs. Markovitz as Den Mother, Steven as Cub Scout and Mr. Markovitz as Cub Master.

ECHOES FROM YESHIVA

From its temporary home, at Temple Emanuel, the Providence Hebrew Day school sent out a publication. It is called "Hed Ha'Yeshiva," the Echo of the Yeshiva. It was sent to me and to all who are interested in the Yeshiva. Chances are that you, too, have received this mimeographed journal, and have put it aside for future reading. My advice to you is: take it out and read it now.

This first publication of the Yeshiva will surprise you and delight you.

My friends, I have been a teacher for many, many years. Classes have come and gone. Every once in a while a student would appear who would show great promise and the teachers are full of hopes.

But even the best of students in an afternoon school does not reach the heights of the students in the Hebrew Day school.

The journal is an attempt to give an offering of the fruits of the Yeshiva. What do the pupils learn? What fills their minds? What is their reaction to this new education from which all their friends are exempt?

To me all the questions were answered in the positive.

They do their work with joy. They are happy with their lot. And they learn Torah, Real Torah, without adulteration.

There are the really delightful stories by the pupils of grade Bes. Second graders writing beautiful Hebrew, lively Hebrew, about Tu B'shvat, about a girl who forgot to say her prayers, about a lion who turned out to be a kitten, and many others. They are playful. They are joyful. They show that the children have fun.

But the bulk of the journal is given to the students of grades 7 and 8.

Michael Bonin writes of the three things our forefathers had to do in times of emergency: Gifts, prayer and war. Jacob was the first one to do it when he prepared to meet his brother Esau. He sent a gift ahead, he prayed, and he got ready to fight if necessary. So did we when we asked for the return of Israel to us, its rightful owners. We paid dearly for every dunam of land we bought from the Arabs. We paid for every new settler who came to Israel. We prayed. Oh, how we prayed for hundreds of years, ever since we lost the land: Return us, O Lord, into our land. And when all this did not help, we did the third thing. We fought.

A very apt parallel, beautifully written.

Hinde Keller divides the commandments we have into three groups: Those that are between man and his Creator, those that are between man and his neighbor, and those that are between man and himself. But all of them bring comfort to the man who does them and observes them. This is the way of a Mitzvah. You do a good deed and the deed makes you a better human being.

Beautiful thought, beautifully expressed.

Deborah Keller likes her Bible studies, in the original, of course. She advises every one to do the same, though she is only on the Book of Genesis. It makes you sad to read of Abraham being told to leave his birthplace and family and to go where God will tell him. But even sadder was the command of God to offer his only son Isaac. Abraham did both. He did not question; why? How glad she was to learn that it was only a way of trying him out. He really did not have to sacrifice his son.

Myrna Sternbeck thinks that the Bible is a treasury of wisdom for those who learn it. She says:

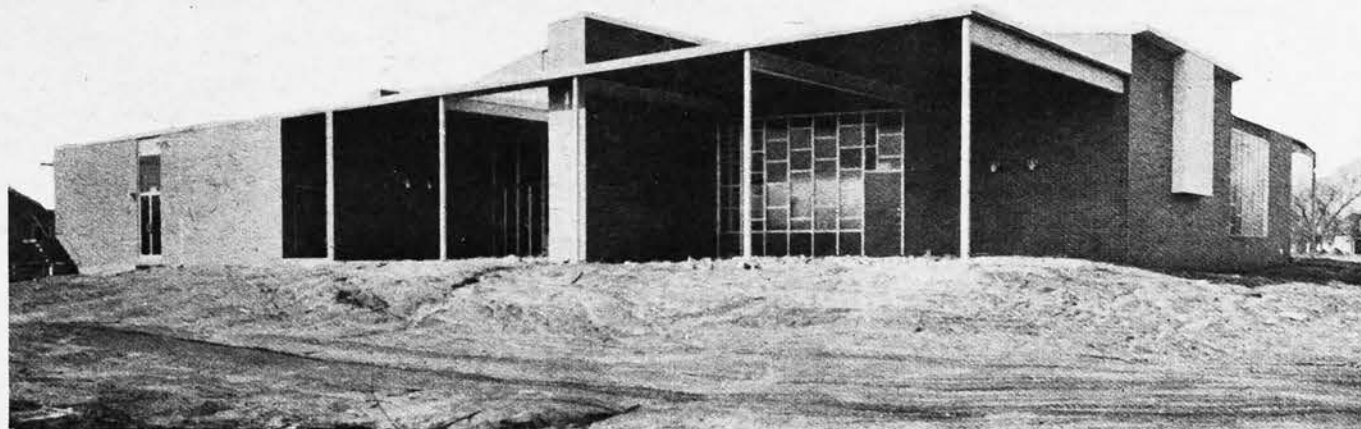

"I have deep feelings about the Tanach (the Bible) that I find difficult to write about them."

And she is only in grade 5.

Shall I go on? I have covered only the first 5 pages of the journal. There are in it 23 pages. I have tasted of the journal and I have found it to be good. You go and read it by yourself.

(Mr. Segal's opinions are his own. His views are not necessarily those of this newspaper.)

NEW TEMPLES

The Exterior of Temple Beth Am of Warwick

TEMPLE BETH AM BUILDS

Six years ago a letter sent by Israel Moses brought about a meeting of some 16 people in a small room of the State Airport. This meeting on April 29, 1954 marked the start of a new Jewish congregation.

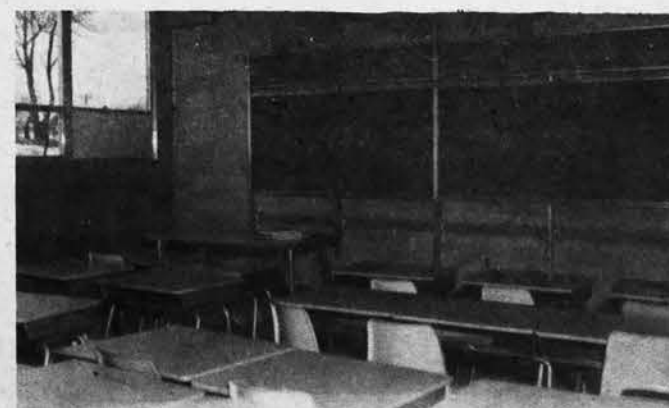

Within a short time Temple Beth Am, the Warwick Jewish Community Center, was a reality and growing.

Now, almost exactly six years later, Temple Beth Am has just dedicated its new home on Gardiner Avenue in Warwick. Ira Rakantansky was the architect for the new temple which cost $157,000 and Nils Johnson was the contractor.

The spacious new Temple provides room for religious and social activities as well as classroom space for the 110 children in the religious schools. (There were 20 children about five years ago.)

--IN SUBURBIA

Temple Sinai, the suburban reform temple which was started in 1958 with 10 families, now has 116 families as members. Its religious schools, which are in their second year, have enlarged their membership from 91 children to 135 children at all age levels. At its recent Purim celebration and open house held at the Garden City School in Cranston on March 13, more than 90% of the membership of the temple visited to see what the children were doing.

They saw the classrooms and the second in a series of three workshops sponsored by the Sisterhood for pre-school children. This workshop which was conducted on Chanukah and will be held again at Passover serves to give the smaller children a background of the holidays through stories, music and dances. They also saw Purim plays put on by members of all grades in the religious schools, from kindergarten through the 10th grade.

Members of the school committee are Mrs. Philip Segal, chairman; Mrs. Henry Blum, Mrs. Oscar Davidson, Dr. Jack Goldstein, Mrs. Albert Kotler, Dr. Murray Miller, Arnold Fellman, Robert Meyer, Alvin Parkin, Mrs. Norman Torman and Allen White and Dr. Albert Goodman, ex-officio.

Your Money's Worth

by SYLVIA

SOLID SPENDING

By its own sharply increased spending on its new plants and equipment this year, American industry is giving a vital forward push to our economy and is virtually assuring the current uptrend will continue right through 1960.

Assuming that you, the American consumer, also follow through on your plans to spend substantially more this year than last for such big-ticket items as autos and appliances, the direction for this first year of the new decade is set: UP.

1960 is not shaping up as a year of extravagant, spectacular boom, great price pressures.

It is shaping up as a year of strong business, sustained advance, climbing employment, record incomes, reasonable price stability.

This pattern of solid but not superlative expansion has just been given major confirmation by two extremely important surveys of American industry's spending plans in 1960. To be specific:

Recently the Dept. of Commerce and Securities & Exchange Commission released the eagerly-awaited Government survey on business plans for plant expansion and improvement.

This survey indicates that just about every type of business intends to hike its investments in new factories and equipment this year by an overall figure of more than 15 per cent over 1959. This would lift total outlays to above $37 billion, at last bring them back to the all-time peak level of 1957.

Today came the National Industrial Conference Board survey, made under the sponsorship of "Newsweek," of what industry actually is earmarking in cash to finance these expansion plans.

This survey shows that even in the strike-depressed fourth quarter of 1959, appropriations of cash by manufacturing companies for their new plants were running a full 40 per cent over a year ago.

Either survey alone would be significant, but together they make a truly persuasive story, since the earmarking of the cash for the factories represents the translation of plans into reality. What's more, the "Newsweek" study discloses that cancellations of appropriations in 1959's final quarter were only half the year-ago rate and at the lowest percentage in the history of the survey.

The message is clear and cheerful. Rising spending by business is second only to rising spending by consumers as an economic spur. As an illustration, when a corporation puts up a new factory, it makes jobs and paychecks at the hundreds of companies supplying lumber, steel, nails, etc. for the factory. It directly gives jobs and paychecks to the workers building the factory. It puts money into the cash registers of all the stores, shops and services catering to the workers affected. Why, then, don't these surveys spell all-out boom?

The explanation is that while they underline that the direction of business spending is up, the momentum of the rise is not soaring. The 40 per cent year-to-year increase in appropriations isn't as big as the year-to-year 43 and 54 percent gains shown in the previous two quarters. The 15 percent rise in spending plans is impressive, but the increase is not on the scale of the capital goods boom we had in 1955-57.

In addition, while other studies and statistics underline that you, the U.S. consumer, are buying freely, you're not splurging either.

And finally, as the Federal Government moves into a budget surplus, it'll be taking more cash out of the economy in taxes than it is putting in via spending, will actually be exerting a "deflationary" influence.

Solid but not sensational advance--that's the pattern telegraphed by these key surveys. It well may be that this is the sort of advance we can sustain for a lot longer than most observers now think.

The Purim Carnival at the South Side Jewish Community Center which was climaxed by the selection of a Queen at the dance in the evening was held on March 12.

TEENS VS. TIMES

By Marlene S. Finn

Times have changed and so have TEENS. Grandpa's bicycle-built-for-two has been replaced by grandson's foreign sports car with the four speed forward shift. But it's "what's up front that counts" — that is, who's behind the wheel. TEENS want cars; cars need drivers; drivers need licenses: TEENS become licensed drivers of cars. It's a ceaseless, vicious cycle. It would seem reasonable, at this point, to assume that cars have changed our TEENS.

Let's consider the effect of this modern vehicle on standard dating procedure. Teenagers have tacked a "heaven forbid" sign on busses and streetcars. These old-fashioned modes of transportation, so says our beatnik linguist, are "way out." Today's cry is, "Say, Dad, may I have the car tonight? I've got a date." (This statement, of course qualifies almost any request.) Hopefully receiving an affirmative answer, our model TEEN can be spotted dashing out the front door with his set of car keys dangling from his pocket.

Fifteen minutes later, with his date at his side, our TEEN is faced with, what in olden times, was called an unheard-of dilemma. Where should he go? Within a short driving distance, he finds a vast assortment of theaters, dances, and parties. Attempting to "paint the town red", he is at least able to drive through it. Thus we see that today's TEENS, while enjoying the privilege of increased leisure, are also enjoying increased freedom.

Here is the real reason—the key reason — for the change in our TEENS. Exposed to an abundance of clubs, athletic, and social activity; moreover extensive scholastic training, our teenagers learn responsibility at an early age. Although not always through the family, which in previous years was more closely knit, each individual member, especially the teenager, has unlimited opportunity to develop a well-rounded personality and to secure a balanced education. The occurring change, as a result of fluctuating social environment, additional responsibility, and the rapid pace of modern American life, can now be easily understood.

Being both an idealist and a realist, the teenager is plagued by that widely quoted line, "Everybody's talking about the weather, but nobody's doing anything about it." We can't underestimate his ability, nor can we deny his maturity. The teenager is the eighth wonder of the world.

The car, which superficially appeared to be the cause of our changing TEENS, is now recognized as merely an example of this change. The actual cause is in this increased atmosphere of independence. Never following a pattern, but changing with the altering of time, the teenager will always hold a unique position in life — not quite an adult, but hardly a child.

TEEN-AGERS What Do You Think About Steady Dating?

MICHAEL GORDON, 15, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Gordon, 74 Brookside Drive, Cranston.

"I have gone steady though I'm not doing it now. As long as it doesn't go too far, it gives you a sense of security—gives you someone to rely on and it's a 'lot of laughs'."

HARRIET HERMAN, 13, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Herman of 200 Calamon Rd., Cranston.

"It depends on what is meant by going steady. To go steady a couple of months is all right. For a teen-ager to go steady for a long time—a couple of years—I don't care for it."

RICHARD SALTZMAN, 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Saltzman of 409 Montgomery Ave., Prov.

"I believe in steady dating as long as it doesn't go too far. For the girl it means she can always depend on a date. Boys, I think, like to go around with different girls."

RONNI SACHS, 13, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Sachs of 159 Massasoit Drive, Warwick.

"I don't believe in going steady. I don't like to be with the same boy all the time. I want to be able to go out with everyone. It's more fun that way."

WARREN ZISSERSON, 15, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Zisseron, 54 Netherlands Ave., Cranston.

"I think steady dating in general is a childish idea. Teen agers are not old enough to get too serious. It might be all right as a fad or "for kicks" just so it doesn't interfere with school."

ALICE FERSHTMAN, 13, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. M. Fershtman, 21 Calamon Rd., Cranston.

"Going steady gives a girl a sense of security—you always have a date for dances. But you have to like the person an awful lot. It should not be a one-sided feeling—it should be shared."

Meet . . . RUTH KOTLEN

by Marlene S. Finn

This teenager, whose sparkling blue eyes and radiant smile illuminate an already shining personality, is Ruth Kotlen. Although she stands only five feet in height, her capabilities are immeasurable. Serving as vice president of both the Senior class and the Student Council at West High School, she demonstrates true executive talent.

Ruth, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Kotlen of 82 Oak Hill Avenue, Pawtucket, is the "Most Respected," "Most Dependable," "Best Pal" that anyone could request. The preceding three superlatives, voted to her by fellow classmates, are just a sample of her overflowing popularity.

"Westerdays," the product of conscientious efforts on the part of West's yearbook staff, bears the name, "Ruth Kotlen, Advertising Manager." Associated also with the French Club, Library Club, Glee Club, and Dramatics Society, she seems an endless wonder to her many friends.

"Busyness" is her pleasure, whether in club activity or sports. This vivacious cheerleader is seen at all the West High football and basketball games, "rooting for the Rangers."

In the community, she is vice president of Judy Ann Leven BBG, treasurer of Junior Achievement of Rhode Island, and assistant pledgemaster of Phi Delta Sorority. Her warm manner and deep concern for others have made her a fine leader—an even finer friend.

Vacation to Ruth means part-time work as a bookkeeper, catching-up on her correspondence, and bowling for enjoyment. There's never a dull moment for this busy little miss.

Having attained membership in the Rhode Island Honor Society, she is looking towards a promising future. Her life-long ambition has been to enter the nursing profession. With such outstanding qualifications, she is certain to fulfill her wish.

Contemporary Artists Settle At 30 Benefit Street

In May, in commemoration of Rhode Island Independence Day the group plans a show, "Benefit Trail". And they also plan to repeat the Bal Fantastique, a costume ball, which they held for the first time last year and which according to Mr. Swartz was a "rousing success."

Mr. Swartz feels that the members of the community should be encouraged to buy original works of art by local artists. Many of the local artists have received prizes for their paintings and a good painting Mr. Swartz says is also a good investment since it appreciates in value as it gets older rather than depreciates. Of course, Mr. Swartz understands that some people feel rather uncertain as to what is good and what isn't good — but someone who is uncertain can be helped by anyone who has any understanding of art.

Mr. Swartz besides being vice-president and being in charge of public relations, is executive director of the Rhode Island Industrial Exposition, the showcase for the products and services of Rhode Island industry, whose exhibits are on the Concourse of Union Station in Providence.

Officers of Contemporary Artists, other than Mrs. Arnold and Mr. Swartz, are Mrs. Harvey Salk, treasurer; Mrs. J. Sorensen, secretary; Mrs. Arthur Senior, mailing secretary, and Dr. Aaron Newtzw, immediate past president.

Looking at sketches drawn by a member artist are Harriet Arnold and Nathaniel Swartz, president and vice-president respectively, of Contemporary Artists, Inc.

CONTEMPORARY ARTISTS SETTLE AT 30 BENEFIT STREET

Housed on the second floor of a building which just turned 100 years old this January, Contemporary Artists, Inc., for the first time in its history has permanent headquarters.

The art club which is now at the Art Center at 30 Benefit Street was formed in 1944 as a regular art group. But according to Nathaniel Swartz, vice-president of the group, there was a "lack of members and of interest."

In 1954, by relaxing their by-laws a bit and making the group independent it has become revitalized and has been flourishing. And with the rental of permanent quarters he feels that they are on the right way up.

Contemporary Artists has two kinds of membership — the artist members who paint or sculpt; and the associate members who are interested in art, are interested in learning more about art and wish to help encourage the painting membership.

There are sketching groups, informal work shops and an educational program in the form of lecture demonstrations held at the galleries which are open to members and guests only. To the layman these give an appreciation in art techniques. To the working artist these demonstrations are a means of visually satisfying his knowledge of other art forms.

Now in the process of enlarging their organization through the enrollment of more members, both artist and associate, they are determined to interest more people in art — particularly in the local artist.

Of the 110 works which were selected for the First Rhode Island Arts Festival last summer, 15 selected for hanging came from Contemporary Artists and of those, four won prizes.

The group plans to have shows without interruption. They plan at least four or five all-member shows, and several one or two or three man shows. In April there will be a Special Invitational Show to which will be invited those artists who had served as judges at former shows in the galleries.

Harry Coppel had 3 points and Si Fain 2.

A pretty good crowd attended, and I would say this affair should become an annual event.

Questions And Opinions

Several of the questions that were thrown at the sports panel at a recent Temple Emanuel Brotherhood Sunday morning breakfast had to be left unanswered because of the time element. I took a couple home with me for future reference.

One of them concerned Floyd Patterson's now definite return bout with the heavyweight champion, Ingemar Johansson. How, the questioner wanted to know,
would Floyd fare with the champ
the second time around?

I put this to Tony Macaroni, fourth Rhode Islander to serve as president of the National Boxing Association. Without hesitating at all, Tony said Floyd will win and take back the title.

His reasoning: Patterson is faster, a better boxer. In the first fight, he didn't know what to expect, or how deadly Ingo's right could be. Now he is forewarned, and can concentrate on avoiding the right while outboxing his foe.
So says Tony Macaroni.

He could be entirely right. Yet, Patterson will be bucking not only tradition, but form, if he succeeds.
The history of the heavyweight division shows clearly that a boxer who has been knocked out or badly beaten in the first fight has always looked worse in the return. His knowledge of his conqueror's style and ability is usually offset by his gun-shyness, as he involuntarily recalls the beating he took. And yet, some day, some ex-champ is going to upset the history books and re-gain the title. Macaroni thinks Patterson is the man.

Another question concerned the Japanese, and how long have they been interested in baseball. I haven't gone to the reference books on that one, but the fact is that the Japs were crazy about our national game as far back as the early 1930s. They knew of the exploits of Babe Ruth and followed his career for many years before the Bambino led an American team over there in 1933.

But the reason for my mention of this subject has to do with a World War II episode that it brought to mind — an episode that some will remember, others may have forgotten, and the younger sports fans
may never have known.

You've heard of the Japanese shout of "Banzai!" as they charged the Americans in the Pacific war areas. Well, the Japs came up with what they thought was an improvement of that rallying call as the war progressed.

Instead of the traditional banzai,
the Japs sought to goad the Americans by shouting an invective that they felt sure would infuriate the U. S. troops as much as the sight of their flag being trampled in the dust.

They yelled: "To hell with Babe Ruth!"

Being such avid baseball fans themselves, and having such an intense love for the mighty Babe even through the distortions of war, the Japs thought this to be the insult supreme.

The Babe was about three or four years away from his death at the time, although he already was a very sick man. In happier, healthier days, he might have responded to this "insult" with booming laughter as he enjoyed the significance of the charge.

Now, however, Ruth glowered at his informant and retorted:
"To hell with them, too!"

COLORADO U. HILLEL
DENVER — Only 25 per-cent of the approximately 400 Jewish students at Colorado University new Hillel House at Boulder, near this city, Rabbi Milton Elefant, Hillel director at the university, told a seminar on "Ethics on Campus." Student attendance at Hebrew classes and at "significant" discussion groups is less.

Spring Chatter

It had been intended, two weeks ago, that this week's space be devoted to an analysis of the Boston Red Sox and their chances for the coming year. A column on the subject was written, and it turned out to contain considerably more optimism about the Sox as a team than the fans generally have been led to believe during this spring training season.

One of the team's strong points in that essay was a catcher named Sammy White, whom I lauded profusely. I always liked Sammy, and defended him in many a baseball discussion.

The column on the Sox was handed in well ahead of the deadline, for once. And that will teach me never to be so prompt; had I waited till the last minute, as usual, I would have known about the big trade, and subsequent retirement of White, before banging out my optimistic report.

Fortunately, that story was caught before the typesetting machines started chewing on it. It will not be rewritten, or published, of course, until it is known who figures to be Boston's first string catcher.

In the meantime . . .

He Knew His Dodgers

The wreckers are tearing down old Ebbetts Field, and chunks of history, drama, tragedy and humor are emerging from the ruins even as the famous walls come tumbling down.

There was the day years ago when a late-arriving Dodger fan heard a mighty roar go up from the crowd just as he entered Ebbetts Field.

"What's going on?" he yelled up to a fan seated alongside the ramp.

"The Dodgers got three men on base," came the excited reply.

"Which base?"

To the writer of that anonymous letter: Your note is being submitted to the proper officials. I have no connection or influence in this matter. But you picked a bad year. I don't think your boy has a chance. The result very likely is a forgone conclusion.

Youthful Old Timers

Although several weeks have passed since the occurrence, mention must be made of the Old Timers-Varsity basketball game played at Nathan Bishop gym under the sponsorship of the Jewish Community Center.

With all due respect to a talented (and very likely unsuspecting) varsity squad, the Old Timers deserve a public pat on the back. Several of them played at the old Center gym on Benefit Street as much as 20, 25 and 30 years ago; they were not in the best of shape, naturally. Yet, they set a fast, rough pace, and maintained it throughout.

And when the smoke of battle had cleared, the teams were tied at 47-all!

The Old Timers took an early lead, held it until late in the first period, then lost it and never got it back. Trailing by only 10-6 at the period, the oldsters fell back to a 24-11 halftime deficit as the Varsity boys started to click. A brief opening minute splurge opened an even wider lead in the third period; and then the Old Timers started to come on. They closed the gap to 35-31 at the end of the period, lost ground at the start of the final lap, then came to life again with an almost incredible rally that finally tied the score as the clock was running out.

They could have been called the Rough Riders, and they weren't exactly paragons of virtue in their dealings with their younger foes. At times the game resembled a football game, and one Varsity player was tackled on the two yard line; but it was still fun, and the Old Timers displayed plenty of verve and ability considering their ancient status.

Marty Miller, a college star not many years ago, paced the grads with 14 points, and that all-around athlete, Murray Trinkle, had 8. Sam Rose scored 6, as did Ben Harriet. Tommy Pearlman chipped in with 4, along with Burton Fain, while
