Education Tax Undergoes Changes

LONDON — The notorious education tax for would-be emigrants which was finally and formally gazetted in the bulletin of the Supreme Soviet has undergone some subtle changes recently. They amount to a relaxation in the original terms, and international pressure against the measure must be the main reason. Mr. Shumilin, a Deputy Minister of the Interior, has announced that pensioners are exempt and that reductions will be made according to the length of time a person has worked. Men who have worked for twenty-five, fifteen and eight years respectively will have to pay a quarter, a half or three-quarters of the levy.

Mr. Shumilin also confirmed that some people may be exempted altogether, although the exact grounds remain obscure. But this suggests again that international pressure may play a part since a large batch of exemptions seemed to coincide with the American Congress and examination of the US-Soviet trade agreement. In the last three months almost 800 families were let off the tax. While all these relaxations are welcome, it seems possible that the hardship the tax would cause was to some extent over-estimated abroad at the beginning. It is impossible to know how many people have been deterred from applying to

Actor Arness Gives Ranch To Brandeis

LOS ANGELES — Actor James Arness, TV's towering Marshall Dillon, has staked out a new frontier with a $2 million land gift to help Southern California's Brandeis Camp Institute pioneer new methods of overcoming college youth alienation.

The popular marshall of "Gunsmoke" has deeded to the youth facility a scenic 950 acre ranch, valued at approximately $2-million, immediately adjoining the BCI's own 2250 camp institute at Santa Susana, 35 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

He presented the deed to Dr. Max W. Bay, president of the 33-year old "laboratory of living Judaism," at a luncheon of the Brandeis board of directors in the Beverly Hills Club. BCI is philanthropically maintained.

The Arness property contains ranchhouses, corrals, barns and farm outbuildings, and has been operated by its actor owner as a cattle, horse and crops ranch since 1960.

"It was a truly ecumenical act by Mr. Arness, who is not himself Jewish," Dr. Bay said. "It will help us to preserve from any approach by subdividers the natural beauty of our area."

RECEIVES APPEAL

SOFIA — The Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party has received an appeal from the Israeli Communist Party (Rakah) asking for its "solidarity in the struggle against Israeli aggression and her policy of annexation."

emigrate by the sudden imposition of the tax. But since November over 600 families have paid, either from their savings or in some cases from donations from outside the Soviet Union.

In spite of the tax the number of Soviet Jews being allowed to leave for Israel doubled last year. Israeli authorities expect this year's total to reach up to 50,000. This increased exodus has also increased the small number of Soviet Jews who in disillusionment with Israel want to return home. Recently a dozen waiting in Austria invaded a press conference given in Vienna by Mr. Peled, the Israeli Minister of Immigration. However, the fact remains that whatever problems would-be emigrants face, first in getting permission to leave the Soviet Union, and then in settling in Israel, far more still want to go than the Soviet authorities are allowing out. None of the various devices which have been attempted, from the education tax to temporary call-up in the army, or dismissal from work or trial and imprisonment, has stopped the flow of applications. It may be true that the great majority of Soviet Jews are not pressing to leave. Those who are have a right to go and should not be made to suffer.

Rabbinical Council Asks For Government Tax Credits For Jewish Parochial Schools

MONSEY, N.Y. — The largest Jewish Orthodox rabbinic body in the country, citing serious financial difficulties confronting all-day Jewish schools, has appealed to Congress to pass a measure to give tax credits to parents for the tuition they pay these schools.

In a unanimously adopted resolution, 500 Orthodox rabbis attending the midwinter conference of the Rabbinical Council of America at the Monsey Park Hotel contended that such tax reductions would not be a violation of the constitutional prohibition of the establishment of a state religion.

Rabbi Louis Bernstein, president of the 1,000-member organization, said, "Since contributions to religious schools are tax exempt, then tuition paid to them can be equally deductible."

There are 425 all-day Jewish schools in the country, most of them under Orthodox auspices, with an enrollment of 85,000. The schools provide general education and religious.

Rabbi Bernstein said, "The all-day Jewish schools are supported almost entirely by parents of the pupils through tuition and fund-raising events."

Recently these schools have reported other increasing financial difficulties stemming from rising costs and increasing enrollments. Religious and lay leaders have called Jewish assistance agencies to give the day schools financial support and assign them "the

Women's Request Brings Split In AJA

LONDON — A split has developed within the 102-year-old Anglo-Jewish Association over whether it should support a petition recently sent to rabbinical authorities all over the world by the International Council of Jewish Women appealing for measures to relieve Jewish women from certain personal hardships caused by rigid interpretations of halacha.

A meeting of the AJA's Council where the petition was to be discussed was cancelled without explanation recently. It was disclosed later that the Chief Rabbi and other Orthodox members of the Council, objected to a discussion.

But a large body of members insists that the AJA must not dodge the issue and should come out in support of the petitioners. The women have asked for the convening of a rabbinical study assembly to study the problem with a view to alleviating the position of women who want to observe religious law but suffer because of its many archaic provisions.

The AJA is a non-sectarian association of British Jews established to promote good citizenship and Jewish education. Originally anti-Zionist, it is now non-Zionist but supports Israel.

highest priority."

The position taken by the Rabbinical Council of America parallels that of the Roman Catholic Church schools, which are also asking for tax credits.

Israeli Hotels Find Difficulty In Filling Employee Vacancies

TEL AVIV — An American tourist picked up a hotel telephone the other night and asked for a 7-Up. The switchboard operator answered in a charming accent: "7-Up? Yes, sir."

The beverage never arrived, but the next morning he was awakened punctually at 7 o'clock.

That happened in one of this city's best-run hotels. The operator, who was Tunisian born, had been hired for her fluency in French, but her English left much to be desired. The manager sighed, "There's a labor shortage in the country. It's most acute in the hotel industry. We hire the best people we can get, but we simply couldn't find enough multi-lingual girls to operate switchboards."

Israel was not geared for the tourism explosion that followed the Six-Day War of 1967.

In her first 19 years, two million tourists came to Israel. The Ministry of Tourism estimates 850,000 will be here this year, when Israel celebrates her 25th anniversary. Hoteliers estimate that some

Four Arabs, Two Jews Indicted As Members Of Espionage Ring

TEL AVIV — Four Arabs and two Jews suspected of key roles in an espionage and sabotage ring directed by Syrian intelligence were indicted last week in Haifa District Court.

The most serious charges against them, punishable by life imprisonment, are "committing an act with the intention of aiding the enemy in its war against Israel" and "passing information to the enemy with the intention of injuring the security of the state." A life sentence in these instances would result in at least 20 years imprisonment. Their trial begins February 11.

AJCongress Asks Chafee To Repudiate Official Memorandum

NEW YORK — The American Jewish Congress has called on Navy Secretary John H. Chafee to repudiate an official memorandum urging chaplains to play a "strong role" in the year-long evangelical campaign known as Key 73. A spokesman for the organization said the memo, dated October, 1972, and written on stationery of the Navy personnel bureau, had apparently been sent by the chief of chaplains, Rear Admiral F.L. Garrett. In a letter to Secretary Chafee, Rabbi Yaakov Rosenberg, chairman of the congress Commission on Jewish Affairs, charged that the message encouraged Navy chaplains "in effect to engage in religious proselytization." "Missionary activity is not, under our constitutional system, a proper role for government," he said. Key 73 is a nationwide campaign involving most major Protestant denominations and some Roman Catholic dioceses.

District Attorney Itzhak Grebli said that 24 more suspects would be indicted, probably next week, and that they had been charged mainly with "membership in a hostile organization," punishable by 10 years imprisonment.

About 150 suspects were questioned and 60 detained after the security services moved last month against the suspected ring, said to be the biggest ever uncovered.

The two Jewish defendants, Ehud Adiv and Dan Vered, both 26 years old, and three of the Arabs, Daud Turki, 45, Subhi Nasrani, 28, and Anis Karawi, 28, were all charged with having gone to Syria, passed information there and undergone training in the use of arms and explosives for sabotage against Israeli installations. The sixth accused man, Simeon Haddad, 36, was not charged with that offense.

Mr. Turki, proprietor of a bookstore in Haifa, was said to have conceived the idea of a Marxist revolutionary underground to subvert the Israeli Government and to have begun recruiting members in 1969.

Mr. Turki was said to have recruited Mr. Adiv, a university student who was born in a kibbutz and served with a paratroop unit in the 1967 war. Mr. Adiv was allegedly put in charge of the "Jewish faction," and his recruits were said to have included Mr. Vered, a teacher. Four more Jewish suspects, all extreme leftists, have been detained and will presumably be charged later.

Mr. Adiv was said to have given Syria information about the deployment of paratroops, air bases, arms production and military and civilian installations that could be considered sabotage targets.

5,000 workers will be required to fill vacancies in existing establishments and to staff hotels now under construction.

Work in hotels has never been prestigious in Israel, and enrollment is one-third below capacity at the Government-sponsored hotel training school.

The director of the school periodically visit immigrants absorption centers, as well as soldiers near the end of their military service, in an attempt to recruit students.

The school and the country's other training institutions are unable to supply the industry's needs. Accordingly, hotels recruit and train their own people.

New enterprises opened last year included the Dan Caesarea, a luxury resort hotel on the Mediterranean coast midway between Haifa and Tel Aviv. The hotel required 180 workers, but the Central Training School was able to provide only a few receptionists.

Not far from the hotel there is a village, Or Akiva, inhabited by poor immigrants from North Africa. In their patriarchal society, it had been considered unseemly for girls to work outside their own homes. An executive of the hotel and an official of the local labor exchange walked from door to door in the village, urging hesitant parents to let their daughters work at the Dan Caesarea. The fact that the hotel is managed by a woman helped them overcome skepticism.

The girls were put on the payroll while they were taught to make beds, handle telephone switchboards and to clean. Men working in neighborhood factories were persuaded to switch to the hotel, where they could earn much more money as waiters or maintenance men once they mastered the skills and the necessary decorum. Senior staff was taken from other hotels, in and out of the Dan chain, usually by offers of instant promotions.

David Wilk, deputy director-general of the Ministry of Tourism, said the Government had launched a drive to raise the prestige of hotel employees.

Israeli Geologists Find Many Minerals

JERUSALEM — Israeli geologists have found important deposits of tungsten in the center of the southern Sinai, it was announced this week by Prof. Yaakov Ben-Tor of the Hebrew University.

The 62-year-old German-born chairman of the University's Geology Department said his team had also found an area of some 200 square kilometers of diorite rocks showing "indications of copper content" and signs of copper north of Sharm el-Sheikh "which warrant further surveying."

In Every Generation . . .

By BERYL SEGAL

Dr. Aaron Soviv, the director of the Bureau of Jewish Education of Greater Providence, is one of the few people in town who subscribes to the Hebrew weekly Hadoar. (The Post). Dr. Soviv is the only one, to my knowledge, who contributes to the Hadoar. We have read numerous articles of his on various topics. Dr. Aaron Soviv is an educator, a classicist and a historian. He writes on any one of these subjects.

Recently he published three articles in the Hadoar concerning the Holocaust in Germany and the reaction of the Jewish people to it; the reaction of those who died the death of martyrs, as revealed in the diaries which have come down to us, and in the reaction of those who survived. Also what the impact of the Holocaust was on those of us who have never known the agony and the horrors of Auschwitz and Treblinka.

Every Jew in our times, according to Dr. Soviv, has an obligation to see himself as if tortured, torn to pieces and burned in the gas chambers of Germany. Every Jew of generations yet to come will have to unravel this riddle: How did a nation in the heart of Europe, a supposedly cultured people, turn into beasts of prey? And an even greater puzzle: How did the world stand aside in our hour of despair and not raise a finger to save us from cruel death?

Since there is no answer, every generation of Jews will have to come to this bitter conclusion:

1. That the nations of the world had fallen low morally at the period in history when the Nazis were rampant in much of Europe.
2. That compassion and decency and justice were merely words in the vocabulary of the nations without any meaning and without obligation.

3. That we were left to ourselves and, in spite of everything, we did not lose our "Image of God" when the enemy degraded himself and fell to the level of the beasts.

Dr. Soviv does not believe that every German is guilty of the Nazi atrocities. As it is with every nation, the majority were either passive or "just did their duty" as the Germans put it. But, says Dr. Soviv, people who remain passive when a crime is being committed are themselves guilty of committing this sin. Some Germans, too few unfortunately, cried out against these atrocities, and suffered for it.

The so-called intellectuals of Germany, and of Europe in general, who stood by while Jews were led to the Concentration Camps and to the gas chambers, and who even today do not mention the sufferings of the Jews under the Nazis in their writings of the period, are as guilty as the Nazi, who with his own hands pulled the trigger of his gun on innocent men, women and children in the towns of Eastern Europe.

A Jew has 613 commandments to observe all the days of his life. Now, says Dr. Soviv, another commandment has been added, making it 614.

That commandment is: Do not let Hitler triumph after his defeat!

This commandment unites all Jews, observant and non-observant, nationalists and assimilationists, all of them with one goal. All of them want to create a new life for Jews, in and out of Israel.

Few indeed are the number of followers of the "Council of Judaism" who still insist that we

Stanley Isn't Happy

Traveling around the country lecturing, I get to meet all sorts. And the more of the sorts you meet, the more you meet the same people coming and going. Over and over, in California and New York, Miami and Charleston, Bangor and Scranton, people say the same things.

At the home of the program chairman in one of the Midwestern cities, the hostess interrupted pleasantries to tell me about her son. She said, "Stanley isn't happy." Stanley is 14 years old and dresses beautifully and has weekly manicures.

"That's the best news I have heard all day," I told my hostess. "Stanley isn't happy. Does he have to share a bed with two brothers? Does he have enough to eat? Does he have to contribute his share for the support of the family?"

But Stanley is unhappy. There are Stanleys multiplied by the hundreds of thousands. Not only are the Stanleys unhappy, but their parents feel they aren't getting the best possible education and on top of this no one understands kids any more.

We Americans are child-oriented. Because we are unhappy, we imagine children must be unhappy. Happiness is a word bruited in the television commercials and the advertising col-

PALESTINIANS . . .

Three Israeli soldiers stood guard under the medieval portal of Hebron's Haram El-Ibrahimi mosque, a Herodian monument with proud massive walls. Leaning nonchalantly on their submachine guns, they scrutinized the visitors, courteously warning them to put on the headgear obligatory in synagogues. As one climbed the long stone staircase leading to the enclosure of the mosque, the murmur of a Jewish liturgical chant could be heard. At first, distant and indistinguishable, then clearer, louder, until it finally became almost deafening.

A hundred or so worshippers, including uniformed soldiers with skullcaps perched on the tops of their heads, swayed jerkily before a candle-lit Torah as they fervently celebrated the service. For the first time in 14 centuries, Jews were able to pray in the edifice which houses the tombs — venerated by Moslems as well as Jews — of the patriarchs of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

"Scandalous! A profanation!" cried an old man in Arab dress. His face fringed with a white beard was flushed with stifled anger. He had come to pay his respects before the tomb of Abraham. It faces that of Jacob, where the Jewish sabbath service was being held. "All their behavior is contrary to our beliefs," he continued. "They don't take off their shoes when they enter a holy place; they've installed seats where one is supposed to prostrate oneself; wine, forbidden by our religion, is drunk during their services; they have imposed objects more suited to their worship upon us and they worship noisily in a spot in which silence is the rule. A synagogue in the heart of a mosque! What crime have we committed to deserve such affronts?"

At sundown the tourists leave Hebron and the city regains its appearance of a typical Arab provincial town with its minarets, small white houses, cupolas, arcades, street stalls, and winding narrow streets. A tall, blonde woman — perhaps an American — hurries to leave the souk. Veiled women, draped in their traditional black shawls, openly jostle her with their shoulder when they pass her: urchins throw stones and cry "Yahudya!" — Jewess. Seated in the doorways of their shops, the shopkeepers phlegmatically observe the scene, their expressions indifferent, hostile, or even malignant.

The last crimson rays of the sunset tinged the outlines of the crenellated crown of the mosque on whose summit the silhouettes of submachine-gun-carrying Israeli soldiers are discernible. On the crest of a distant hill overlooking the city, massive, uniform, barracks-like buildings are laid out in a line — the whole dominated by observation platforms and surrounded by barbed wire and chevaux de frise.

This is Kiryat-Arbaa, the new Jewish settlement founded two years ago within the military zone and spread over a tract of more than 740 acres of requisitioned land. Two hundred and fifty families of orthodox Jews — the same ones who demanded the right to hold services in the mosque at Hebron — have moved in. Bulldozers are at work, preparing for the construction of housing for another 200. Shops which compete with the Arab merchants have been opened and Israeli industries are to be set up shortly.

The Palestinians consider themselves to be victims of a "monstrous Zionist plot." Anyone will tell you that the case of Hebron is no exception, that since the first waves of Jewish immigration at the turn of the century all sorts of methods have been used to deprive the native population of their country: by purchase of tracts of land before the creation of the State of Israel and by conquest and terror afterwards; by seizures or confiscations of goods; and with the aid of an impressive legal arsenal invoking religious, historical, economic, political and security arguments. Hundreds of thousands of acres belonging either to Palestinians who had fled abroad or those who chose to remain were thus taken over in the Jewish colonization drive.

It's hardly surprising that the Israeli Government, fearing to set a precedent, and despite a Supreme Court decision and a vigorous wave of protests, has refused to authorize the return of Arab inhabitants of Ikrit and Biraam to their villages from which they had been "temporarily removed" a quarter of a century ago on "security grounds" before their homes had been razed and lands turned over to Jewish colonists.

The Palestinians now live in dread lest the second part of their homeland — the West Bank of the Jordan and Gaza — be in turn incorporated into Israel. In five years, 44 agricultural, civil, or para-military colonies have been established in the territories conquered in 1967. Their number will have risen to 50 by the end of the year.

Two recent expropriation cases have produced an uproar due to their particularly arbitrary nature. In April, 1972, to facilitate a takeover by Jewish colonists, the army chemically poisoned the lands farmed by the people of Akraha in the Nablus region after their refusal to abandon them.

In January, 1972, it forcibly evicted some 20,000 Arabs of Raffah in the Gaza Strip before destroying their homes, filling in their wells and seizing their property covering an area of 75 square miles. It was only after a vigorous press campaign, notably in the newspapers of the Mapam governmental party, that, three months later, the high-ranking officers and civil servants responsible for these measures were reprimanded. Of course, the Palestinians do not believe that the military authorities would have undertaken such a large-scale initiative without precise instructions from the highest Government officials.

This belief is strengthened by the fact that the government has thus far refused to do justice to the plundered farmers while the new agricultural colonies continue to prosper in the Raffah area.

In the former Arab sector of Jerusalem, annexed immediately after the Six Day War, the situation is much less ambiguous. A total of nearly 3,000 acres have been expropriated and a thousand Arab homes destroyed and replaced by new ones to house Jewish immigrants. More than 4,000 Palestinians have been evicted from the dwellings they had occupied in the old Jewish quarter since 1948. The city is spreading in all directions, especially on the rocky hills of what until 1967 was Jordanian territory.

Paradoxically, the economic integration of the occupied territories — despite the greater material comfort it has brought — contributes as much to Palestinian nationalism, if not more, than the territorial conflict. At first glance, such a conclusion seems absurd. Almost everywhere, the relative prosperity of the Arabs compared with the pre-occupation period is strikingly evident. The souks of Jerusalem are constantly filled with tourists who don't haggle over prices. Full employment has restored dignity to refugees who had been living on international charity.

Some of them are having permanent dwellings constructed. Refugee camps on the West Bank bristle with television antennas (the number of television sets in the occupied territories has gone from 3,000 in 1967 to 40,000 in 1972). The purchase of cars by the bourgeoisie has risen by 50 per cent and they have been doing more travelling abroad. On the West Bank, the gross national product and per capita income have almost doubled in four years. This balance sheet, encouraging for General Moshe Dayan and his political allies, has elicited sceptical comment from a number of Israeli officials. In the words of Finance Minister and Labour Party leader Pinhas Sapir, "those who believe that an improved living standard can compensate for national aspirations have not learned the lessons of history."

And, judging from conversations with numerous Palestinians from all social levels, the conditions

umns, and we imagine there must be a way to buy it. If one has a Waring blender and a two-car garage with three cars in it, one imagines one ought to have happiness, too.

Now I am not one to insist that children laugh and smile all the time. There are indeed attendant worries in growing up.

But all over America I hear, "Stanley isn't happy," which should give us a few clues. Fifty years ago you never heard parents discuss their children in terms of "happiness." They said, "Stanley is doing well in school," or "Stanley has a new job," or "Stanley has just been promoted."

That is why I laughed when this mother said, "Stanley isn't happy." Stanley would be a lot less unhappy if his mother stopped asking him if he's happy.

Secrets of the Ice Box

They say that CIA operatives look through wastepaper baskets to discover important security secrets, even infrared photography. Out in the suburbs they say you can tell everything about your neighbors by rummaging through the garbage, and intellectuals have always insisted everything you want to know about a man is revealed by his library.

I claim I can tell everything by examining the ice box. If you see a lot of Clapp's baby food, you know there is either a new baby in the house or an elderly parent with no teeth.

Several toupees in the ice box mean you are in the home of an aging male dress designer or interior decorator. Orange juice in one of those waxed cardboard containers indicates a health fanatic who believes this orange juice is more healthful than frozen or canned juice.

If you find nail polish and lipsticks, you are probably looking at an ice box which belongs to a lady of easy virtue. I get this information from a friend who strayed from family hearth and fidelity only once and then only during the war.

He says all ladies of joy keep cosmetics in the ice box which explains the rather curious food they often serve their clientele. He himself, he confesses, had to sup on some canned meatballs in gravy that resembled molten plastic. The experience has since kept him on the straight and narrow path, and I say amen to that.

If you have a terrible hangover when you wake up and you don't know where you are and find halvah in the refrigerator, then you are in California, which is how they store the precious candy out there.

If it seems the ice box is filled with tiny bananas and oranges and apples, you are not in the home of midgets. You are still in California, because the Christmas gifts of marzipan are mailed out from New York in the shape of little fruits, and Californians also store marzipan in the ice box.

And the FBI reports that there is no better security risk than the bachelor whose ice box is completely filled with local beer.

Mrs. Harvey D. Bronstein

Miss Leni M. Newman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Max Newman of 37 College Drive, Jersey City, New Jersey, became the wife of Harvey D. Bronstein, son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Bronstein of 150 Isabella Avenue, on Sunday, January 21. Rabbi Samuel Berman officiated at the 1 p.m. ceremony which was held at Temple Beth-El in Jersey City.

The couple will go skiing in Maine and then visit in Quebec. They will make their home at 146 Thorndike Street in Brookline, Massachusetts.

The bride was graduated from Boston University and is a Spanish teacher in the Boston public schools.

Mr. Bronstein, an economist, is also a graduate of Boston University and holds both Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts degrees.

USSR Publishes Fees To Be Paid By Emigrants

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union followed up the publication of its controversial immigration law by making public the detailed regulations and the scale of fees to be paid by emigrants as reimbursement for a free higher education.

The scale provided an interesting indicator of the value placed by the Soviet authorities on different types of advanced training for which those who leave the country must provide reimbursement.

The tax duties ostensibly apply to all emigrants, but critics have interpreted their introduction as being directed mainly against Jews, more than 30,000 of whom left the country last year.

The growing exodus of Jews to Israel accounts for most of the strictly controlled emigration from the Soviet Union. Moreover, Jews constitute the most highly educated ethnic community in this country.

At the top of the tax scale is Moscow University, the most prestigious of Soviet institutions of higher learning, where the four-year course of studies was said to cost the Government 12,200 rubles, or $14,900. All other universities were rated at half that amount.

Moscow University at Top
Among specialized colleges, the highest value, and evidently social Prestige, was placed on education in a music conservatory, theatrical institute or other advanced school in the arts and letters. Teachers' colleges and law schools were among those at the bottom of the list, with the cost rated at 4,500 rubles.

Publication of the emigration law and now of the detailed regulations has been taken here as an indication that the Kremlin has no intention of backing down in the face of wide criticism, especially from abroad, of the education fees imposed on emigrants.

Although the regulations have been in effect since last August, they were not immediately published. This was variously interpreted as reflect-level over the education fees or as a means of enabling the authorities to cancel the tax without losing face.

Soviet officials have defended the Government's right to impose a tax on the ground that the authorities are entitled to a refund for the costs of higher education provided free by the country.

Under the published regulations, emigrants are given credit for the number of years worked after graduation, and pensioners as well as disabled veterans are exempt from the tax.

These and some other provisions of the law were disclosed just before the new year in a statement by a high police official, but many of the actual fees have now been announced for the first time.

The scale was drafted in the form of a Government directive carrying out a basic decree on the education tax that was adopted August 3 but was not published until last weekend. The detailed directive has now appeared in the first issue for 1973 of an official gazette called Collection of Decrees of the Government of the USSR.

The Government order, issued over the signature of Premier Aleksei N. Kosygin, was also dated August 3 and was identified as No. 573. In addition to listing the amounts due for complete and partial college educations, it also listed fees for the award of post-graduate degrees.

75% FAILURE RATE
TUNIS — The Cairo newspaper Al Akhbar reported that the Egyptian national airline found a 75 per cent failure rate among 200 applicants for positions as stewards and stewardesses. The report said most of those who failed the preliminary examination were graduates of government schools.

Japanese Makuya Sect Presents Ambulance To Magen David Adom

TEL AVIV — Since the Six-Day War of 1967, an ever growing number of members of the Japanese Makuya sect have been visiting Israel. They possess an almost mystical affinity for the Holy Land, a kinship securely bound within their religious beliefs. Groups of Makuya members visit the various holy sites — they can always be seen at the Western Wall, praying, leaning their foreheads against the ancient stones while tears glide down their faces and drop unashamedly at their feet. Their colorful kimonos, embroidered with Japanese characters, stand out from among the other tourists' attire. They are polite, unassuming and exceptionally mindful of order and cleanliness. Their exotic appearance has long been a constant source of wonder and delight to Israelis and tourists alike — until one day last summer, when not a single member of the Makuya sect, or any other Japanese national for that matter, could be seen on the streets of Israel; it was the day following the night of terror and death at Lod International Airport.

As the full horror of the massacre became known throughout Israel, even though no one associated it with those uninvolved in the crime, the Japanese began their long road to atonement and apology for the deed of their three demented countrymen. Such is their sense of honor.

Official apologies, visits to the wounded and compensation money were the various means by which the Japanese people showed their sorrow over the Lod tragedy. But the Makuya group, due to their special feelings for Israel, were casting about for a different (and possibly even more meaningful) expression of their grief. And so, just as the first of the less severely wounded were leaving the Tel Hashomer hospital on their way to recovery, the Makuya sect decided to present an ambulance to Magen David Adom, Israel's emergency medical service, which battled desperately and with all its resources for every human life it could save from carnage.

BERYL SEGAL

 are Frenchman and Englishmen and Americans of the Jewish faith only. They are being ignored, and all the parties and factions and Jews of different shades of convictions, have taken upon themselves that added commandment: to prevent another catastrophe.

There is a letter we can learn from the 25 years of the existence of the State of Israel. People who have never held a gun in their hands have prevailed over an enemy far greater than themselves. They are not happy about it. The literature of the period, especially of the Six Day War with the Arabs, bears witness to that. But the soldiers always held the ugly visage of the Nazis before their eyes, and were determined that it should never happen again.

Golda Meir, during her recent audience with the Pope in Rome, is said to have answered the question of why Israel does not give into the humanitarian demands of the Palestinians. She answered the Pope something like this:

When we Jews were humanitarians the world stepped on us and subjected us to the most inhuman indignities. Now when by necessity we take up arms to protect ourselves, the same world wants us to be "human."

To paraphrase the Hagaddah which we recite at the Seder on the Festival of our Deliverance from the bondage of Egypt, on Passover, Dr. Soviv believes that we will say the following:

In every generation we must see ourselves as if we were tortured, stepped upon, purged and burned in the fires of Auschwitz and Treblink.

And to resolve that it will never happen again.

Today's hand is a real good one, in fact few of the players faced with the problem at hand realized that there was more than a guess involved. There was actual information available, enough so that one who thinks his problem through far enough will come up with the correct answer without guessing. Remember, a guess allows one to be right only half the time. I want to be right all the time when the material is there for me to be right.

West was Dealer, no one vulnerable with this bidding:

 1♦ P P 4♥

There wasn't really much to the bidding, the only problem was what South should do when the bidding came around to him. Most of them felt that the best action was to blast right into game and I agree. Game should be possible with very little in the North hand and there is not enough time to find out whether North has the right cards to make a slam. Actually game was there to be made if the Club suit were handled properly. Some did "guess right," others didn't. Had they listened and watched as things happened and then utilized this information there would have been no guess. You will see what I mean as we play the hand together. Actually, although a few players did make the hand I was unable to watch any of them to see if they guessed or really knew what they were doing.

Every West led the Spade King, switching to a Trump when they saw Dummy's Queen and East's discouraging 4 spot. This Trump lead was won in Dummy and a Diamond led to the Jack hoping East had the Queen for West's opening bid and East's subsequent pass had placed just about all of the high cards with West but East could have had that Queen. Anyhow, now West should lead another Trump, again won in Dummy and another Diamond played for West to win. Now, having no more Trumps and not wanting to play a Spade or a Club, another Diamond would be played by West ruffed by Declarer. All this time Declarer is watching and counting.

The last Trump is now drawn and a small Club led over to Dummy's Jack to take a finesse. This has to work for three tricks have already been lost, one more and the hand goes down, but the finesse does work. Now another Diamond is played for two reasons; first, to get back to the hand to take another Club finesse and while one is at it, to get still a better count of the hand. This is what happens on this trick: West follows and East shows out. What does this do to help solve what problem? First, what is the problem? It is which card should be played at the second lead of Clubs, the Queen or a low one and why one and not the other. In fact, if a high Club were played at any lead from Declarer and covered by West then a Club will have to be lost to East's lowly little 8. So the second lead of Clubs must be a small one on which West's King will fall. But how does one know? I have already given all the information necessary; here it is:

West has followed to both Trump leads and also to all four leads of Diamonds. What did West open the bidding with, not a Diamond but a Heart so we can assume that he had started with a five card Heart suit. How many Clubs does that leave room for? Anyone who can add or subtract can give the correct answer, two; the only trouble is that most players do not take the pains to garner this vital information. Knowing that West now can have but a singleton Club and that that card has to be the King, the only correct play on the second round of Clubs is another small one, not the Queen or 10. Would you have played the hand that way? You truly should have for that is what separates the men from the boys. Moral: If you counted every card in every hand you would be so exhausted you would be too tired to finish a session or at least be able to think properly, but when it is important to do so, by all means always do it then.

Washington Jewish Social Service Agencies Must Integrate Board To Receive Funds

WASHINGTON — Three Jewish social service agencies in the Greater Washington area will be deprived of financial aid from the area-wide United Givers Fund, if by September 1 at least 20 per cent of their board directors are not members of minority groups — blacks or Spanish-speaking persons.

The three organizations received $400,000 last year from the UGF.

The Jewish Social Service Agency was given $225,000 dollars toward a budget of $800,000. The Hebrew Home for the Aged of Greater Washington received $90,000 in its budget of $5,000,000 and the Jewish community center of Greater Washington got about $80,000 toward its budget of $1,300,000.

Seven local Red Cross chapters which last year received a fifth of the $14.2 million donated to the UGF are not members of the HWC and therefore are not subjected to its rulings.

Fifteen of the 87 UGF groups have not yet complied with the quotas.

Some Jewish community leaders have indicated privately that they would seek to have the Jewish groups withdraw from the UGF before submitting to the quota system which they fear will ultimately cause the disappearance of their organizations' Jewish character.

According to Thomas Fetzer, HWC deputy director, the quota system was established in 1970 for implementation in 1972. The quotas are 51 per cent minority group membership on the directorates of Washington — only organizations, 20 per cent in groups serving both Washington and the suburbs, and six per cent in suburban areas only.

The Jewish groups are centered in Rockville, a nearby Maryland suburb.

The Jewish population in Greater Washington is approximately 120,000. About 20,000 Jews live in Washington proper and most of the rest in suburban Maryland. There are very few black Jews in the region.

Harry Van Cleve, president of the HWG said "we intend to drop groups if they don't comply, but we are hopeful that nearly everyone will comply."

George M. Pikser, executive director of the Jewish Social Service agency said, "I don't know why a black person would want to serve on the board of this organization when there are so many problems in the black community that need all the leadership available."

Isaac Franck, executive vice president of the Jewish Community Council of Greater Washington, an umbrella organization for area Jewish institutions, said "it is important in terms of American culture to have agencies which serve specific cultural groups."

Hello Again!

News of the Sports World by Warren Walden

FAIRBANKS: Once the name Fairbanks brought to mind a "scales" or weighing device; also "Doug" and his son "Doug Jr." but now the name is synonymous with the New England Patriots and their new coach, Charles Leo "Chuck" Fairbanks. He's the fellow with the big job. It's a big job as an employment opportunity and a big job as an effort. It's a chance for greatness or a flop. It emphasizes and brings to mind that there is only one letter necessary for changing the word "champ" to "chump." Viewing it as a pessimist, one could say, "What a spot." As an optimist, "What a Spot!"

ANOTHER CHARLES LEO: If Fairbanks can go as far in the world of football as another Charles Leo went in baseball, we'll be able to cheer the Patriots loud and long. The other one was the late "Gabby" Hartnett of the disputed claim of birth location. Woonsocket claims "Gabby" and so does Millville. The late Dr. Eugene Anthony Aloysius Hagan always said that Millville had two claims to fame. One was that it was from whence "Gabby" Hartnett came and the other being that it is the only place where the cows used to lay eggs.

GREATEST OF THE GREAT: No doubt about it, "Gabby" was one of the greatest of the great. In the recent obit on the passing of the great man, it was mentioned that he was the catcher when Babe Ruth pointed to a spot in the bleachers during a world series game and proceeded to hit a Charlie Root pitch to the designated point. The obit didn't mention that Hartnett was also the catcher when Carl Hubbell performed the greatest pitching feat in history. With "Gabby" calling the signs, Hubbell fanned five of the outstanding batsmen in the annals of baseball in an All Star game — Ruth, Gehrig, Foxx, Simmons and Cronin — with dynamite laden bats, in succession.

PASSED UP: Years before Hartnett gained fame as a catcher with the Cubs, he was passed by by a group of managers in Tim O'Neil's Providence Amateur Baseball League. The word "amateur" could have been misconstrued just a little in the famed Providence League. It seems that the keen-eyed Tim O'Neil had seen young Hartnett in action in a Sunday game up Douglas-way and mentioned "Gabby" at an ensuing meeting of the Amateur League. "I've seen the greatest catching prospect I've ever seen," Tim enthused. "He wants recognition; wants to play in the Providence Amateur League; is willing to play for his carfare; hopes some big league scout will see him."

"How much money does he want?" some of the managers questioned. "It isn't money he's looking for at this time," Tim went on. "We get more publicity, more recognition, and he thinks he has a better chance for being discovered if he plays in our league. He'll be a credit to our league and I can't stress his ability enough. Anyone want him?"

A little huddle and then a couple of spokesmen. No. They didn't need him. How could he be that good if he weren't demanding a substantial sum of money?

And the Providence Amateur League managers passed up the "Great Gabby Hartnett." It didn't stop "Gabby" a bit. He jumped right over the Providence Amateur League, went to Worcester of the Eastern League and then to everlasting fame with the Chicago Cubs.

HENDRICKEN NITE! A worthy cause and a noble cause to be assisted by the R.I. Reds of hockey. The Reds are scheduled for a game with Springfield on February 14 — Valentine's Day! There'll be no love in the competition between those rivals who have been a-feudin' and a-fussin' for many, many seasons. Receipts will benefit the Bishop Hendricken Tuition Fund. Tickets are available at the High School, through members of the School's Hockey Team and from the Lettermen's Club. It is listed as the "Civic Center's First School Night." Great gesture by the R.I. Reds and their owner George Sage. There should be more such gestures and not only by generous George who is courageously and optimistically carrying on with his R.I. Reds. Everyone should attend; everyone should be ready with a big cheer for Sage! Patience with the Reds and Courage Camille! CARRY ON!

MIGHT VISIT
TEL AVIV — Gov. Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania said here that "Israel is part of the American peace plan whose architect is Henry Kissinger and therefore it is logical that Kissinger might visit the area in the near future."

Yugoslavian Jews Keep In Touch In Native Country, Israel, US

NEW YORK — More than a year ago, a tough-looking Israeli general sent a letter to the Association of Yugoslav Jews in the US which read, "As I am of Yugoslav origin, I am happy to join in paying tribute to Chief Rabbi Dr. Isaac Alcalay, the spiritual and religious leader of Yugoslav Jewry and one of the prominent scholars and keepers of the Sephardic tradition, on his ninetieth birthday."

The writer was Lt. General David Elazar, now the chief of staff of the Israel Defense Forces who was born in Yugoslavia and who goes under the affectionate name of "Dado," a Yugoslav nickname.

At that time, too, his boss, the then chief of staff, Gen. Haim Bar-Lev, also a Yugoslav, wrote a letter to the association.

And when you talk to Yugoslav Jews in the US, you can see how proud they are of Generals Elazar and Bar-Lev. The latter is now Israel Minister of Commerce and Industry. Unknown to many, Yugoslav Jewry is considered one of the best Jewish communities in the world, "outstanding not only with its love of Israel, but with its unique inner discipline and heroism, evident especially in the years of the last war."

Even today, whether they live in New York or Belgrade or Tel Aviv, Yugoslav Jews keep in touch.

There is a viable Jewish community of 12,000 in Yugoslavia. Jews there are very Jewish conscious. True, there are no diplomatic relations between Israel and Yugoslavia, but in effect it really couldn't matter less. For it is well known today that non-Jewish Yugoslav laborers are working in Israel in the Jewish state's booming construction industry, making money and returning home to Yugoslavia, young and old alike, also visit Israel. And Jews in Yugoslavia sing Hebrew songs, learn Hebrew dances and are free to travel to Jewish organizational conferences throughout the world.

In Yugoslavia, they strike back at vicious Arab propaganda. Since Jews are considered a national minority in Yugoslavia, they can point out that Arab attacks are slander against a national minority, and that does not sit very well in Titoist Yugoslavia.

Yugoslavia itself welcomes back Yugoslavs and that includes Jews. As in many countries of the world, Jews are missed when they leave, or so it appears.

It was, for instance, at a celebration in Sarajevo which marked the 400th anniversary of the Jewish community in what is now the Socialist Republic of Bosnia in Yugoslavia that an official came over to Joseph Levi of the US and literally wept on his shoulder that most of the Jews had left that city.

Moreover, in 1970, Yugoslav Jews gathered in Belgrade on the occasion of the 60th birthday of Dr. Lavoslav Kadelburg, president of the Federation of Jewish communities in Yugoslavia. Dr. Paul Neuberger, a noted attorney and past president of the Association of Yugoslav Jews in the United States, attended, as did other delegates from Russia and other Eastern European countries.

Often at international conferences, Yugoslav Jewry recall the terrible losses suffered in Yugoslavia. At the end of World War II, one could find in Yugoslavia only 500 Jewish survivors out of a Jewish population of 80,000 in 1940. There were 6,000 to 10,000 other survivors who were alive, only because they hid in the forests; or were with Tito's partisans; or because they fled to Italy where it was a little easier for a Jew to survive. Thus about 70,000

Yugoslav Jews perished in the Holocaust. And it was the Ustshi, the fascists of Croatia who rounded up Jews at will and either murdered them or turned them over to the Nazis.

Here in the US, Yugoslav Jews are quite active. To keep in contact with Jews here and in Yugoslavia, the Association of Yugoslav Jews puts out a monthly newsletter exchange with the news publications of the Federation of Jewish communities in Yugoslavia. Both publications are in Serbo-Croatian and carry news of community events, articles of historical interest and social news, such as weddings and bar mitzvahs.

Secondly, American Yugoslav Jews travel often to their former homeland and it is at international conclaves, anniversaries and birthday celebrations that Yugoslav Jews from the US meet with other Yugoslav Jews who are living abroad. Dr. Neuberger has visited Yugoslavia a half dozen times as has Joseph Levi, also a past president of the group.

Obviously, the contact is crucial, not only for American Jews and Israelis to meet with Yugoslav Jews, but also for Americans, Yugoslavs and Israelis to speak with Jews from behind the Iron Curtain.

Many of the meetings, of course, take place in Israel. Since the establishment of the State of Israel, the Hitachdut Olei Yugoslvaia (The Organization of Yugoslav Jews in Israel) has held several conferences, and delegates from the US, South America and Yugoslavia attended.

Why do Yugoslav Jews in the US return for a visit to Yugoslavia? First, to seek out and spend time with relatives. Secondly, Yugoslavia is "in" for tourists and it continues year by year to offer visitors improved hotel facilities and better transportation to its fashionable resorts in the Adriatic such as Dubrovnik. In addition, many Yugoslav Jews in the US are in the import export business and the Tito government is eager for trade and provides a good market for buyers.

Most of the Yugoslav Jews in the US, Sephardim and Ashkenazim alike, are middle class and most still speak Serbo-Croatian as do some of their children.

They hold meetings on Sunday afternoons in their headquarters at 247 West 99th St. here and like other land-manshaften, their activities include parties and lectures. Most Yugoslav Jews here are professionals, attorneys, accountants and clerks.

The Yugoslav Jews have made it clear that they are not a Yugoslav association, but a Jewish organization and they do not get involved in emigre politics. But their members still have their independent view of Tito. Most note that in 1949, Tito allowed about 8,000 Jews to emigrate to Israel and though there is disagreement in the club, many believe Tito is not anti-Israel and certainly not anti-Jewish even though he was friendly with the late President Nasser of Egypt. (By the way, American travelers to Yugoslavia point out that they observed numerous Israeli products on display. Yugoslav Christians, too, are visiting Israel, they add.)

Thus, Yugoslav Jews here are traveling and they are keeping in touch with their brethren in Yugoslavia, and with Israel, of course. And to the Yugoslavs, Israel is, as they themselves put it, "the re-established center and the heart of the Jewish people."

Syrian Army Reported Ordering Guerrillas To Stay Out Of Towns

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The Syrian Army has reportedly ordered Palestinian guerrilla groups to stay out of villages along the Golan heights ceasefire line that were severely bombed by Israel on January 8, with what Syria said were heavy civilian casualties.

Press reports from Damascus, the Syrian capital, said that the army had notified the guerrillas, of fedayeen, in writing that no operations into Israeli-occupied territory were to be carried out unless the Syrian military had given approval.

The Palestine Liberation Organization office here had no comment on the reports, which said that the guerrillas would have to maintain camps at least three miles from villages. The organization is the over-all guerrilla group.

During the Israeli air strikes, which followed what Israel said were several incidents in the Golan heights involving mines and firing on patrols, the civilian casualties in Dail and other villages included 150 dead, according to Syrian spokesman.

They reported Syrian Army measures are similar to those imposed by the Lebanese Army in the southern area bordering on Israel after Israeli armored columns supported by jet fighters swept in and attacked guerrillas and army units in September.

But while Lebanon has adopted a policy of preventing Palestinian guerrilla operations from her territory into Israel, the Syrian Government has not ruled out future actions in the area Israel occupied in the 1967 war. The Syrian restrictions appear intended to reduce the danger of civilian casualties if future battles occur.

In another development, Palestinian guerrilla circles attached importance to statements made in Cairo by Salah Kalaf, a top leader of Al Fatah the main guerrilla group, who attacked Arab governments that "don't allow the Palestinian to fight and then criticize us for lack of action."

Mr. Khalef, better known by his code name abu Ayad, is considered by Israel to be head of Black September, a secret arm of the Palestinian resistance. He said that secret operations around the world "against the enemy wherever he is" will be a continuing part of guerrilla warfare against Israel.

Rumanians Foil Attempt On Israeli Embassy

JERUSALEM — Arab terrorists planned to attack the Israeli Embassy in Bucharest last month but the plot was foiled by Rumanian secret police.

According to newspaper reports, the attack was to have been made simultaneously with the seizure of the Israeli Embassy in Bangkok by four armed terrorists on December 328.

Foreign Ministry sources confirmed that the Pucharest Embassy took special precautions before and during the Bangkok incident on the basis of a tip. The sources declined to comment on the Rumanian role but hinted that it had been very effective.

Mrs. Arthur Einstein Presents Pupils

A group of Mrs. Arthur Einstein's pupils met recently at her home at 349 Morris Avenue to present a musical program.

The program included works by Burgmüller, Clemente, Kabalevsky, Bela Bartok, Mozart, Beethoven and Bach.

Joyce Dulgarian was the guest artist and presented 6 Variations in G Major by Beethoven, and waltzes by Chopin.

A social hour followed the program.

Road Runner Program To Begin At Center

The new Road Runner program of the Jewish Community Center of Rhode Island — a bus transportation Center extension program for children in the Cranston and Warwick areas — will start Sunday, February 4, with a heavy enrollment of elementary and junior high schools boys and girls, it has been announced by Lola Schwartz, director of children's activities at the Center.

The new program will provide bus pickup and delivery service at two points in each of the cities, bringing the children to the Elmgrove Avenue Center on Wednesday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

Children will be picked up on Sundays at approximately 1:30 p.m. and will leave the Center for the return trip at 4:30 p.m. The Wednesday program will include pickup at 6:30 p.m. with the buses leaving the Center at 8:30 p.m.

Further information may be obtained by calling the Center at 861-8800.

RELEASE URGED

AMSTERDAM — The executive committee of the Netherlands Sephardic Congregation has appealed to United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim to "use his influence" to secure the release of 14 Jews imprisoned in Iraq. The committee expressed the hope that the Iraqi regime would "return to its humane policy of the last two years" by releasing the prisoners and permitting all Iraqi Jews to emigrate wherever they wish.

ORGANIZATION NEWS

PROF. CHINITZ TO SPEAK

Professor Benjamin Chinitz of Brown University will be the guest speaker at a breakfast meeting of the Men's Club of Congregation Mishkon Tfiloh on Sunday, February 4 at 8:45 a.m.

Educated at the Yeshiva and Mesifita Torah Vodath through high school, Prof. Chinitz received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Yeshiva University. He received his Masters degree from Brown University in 1951.

Professor Chinitz has served as deputy assistant secretary for Economic Development in the Johnson administration and was responsible for research and planning programs in the Economic Development Administration. He came to Brown University in 1967, served for two years as chairman of the Economics Department and is now spearheading the development of Urban Studies at Brown, serving as chairman of the committee on urban studies, and as a senior member of the urban analysis group.

Married to the former Ethel Kleinman of Providence, he has been active in the general and Jewish communities.

USY DANCE

The Temple Beth Torah USY will hold a dance on Saturday, February 3, from 7 to 11 p.m. The rock group "Sage" will be featured.

NEW AZA GROUP

A new AZA chapter will be formed in Providence with the first meeting scheduled for Wednesday, February 14, at the Jewish Community Center. All Jewish teenagers between the ages of 14 and 18 have been invited to attend.

A coed basketball game will be held at 6:30 p.m. and will be followed by refreshments.

Further information may be obtained by calling Estelle Nemoy at 861-8800.

FAMILY SERVICE

The B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation of the University of Rhode Island will hold a family service on Friday, February 9, at 7 p.m. in the Memorial Union Browning Room. A kiddush will follow.

Center Arts Festival To Start Saturday

The Jewish Community Center's week long JCC Arts Festival, '73 will begin Saturday, February 3, with a dance recital by the Rhode Island Dance Repertory Company and a museum exhibit of primitive arts and artifacts.

The third event of the festival will be a panel discussion on "Cultures in Clash" on Wednesday, February 7, at 8 p.m. at the Center.

On Saturday, February 10, the Center will sponsor the performance of the Trinity Square Repertory's Company's performance of The Royal Hunt of the Sun. The theater performance will be followed by the Festival Ball at the Center beginning at 10 p.m.

Workshops Planned For Adults, Youth

The Jewish Community Center will start two separate series of Workshops in Communication Skills for adolescents and their parents.

Communications Workshop, a sensitivity group for adolescents, will be conducted on Wednesdays from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. starting February 7. For students in grades 7 through 12, the program will be led by Melvin James Bell, Jr., a member of the social work faculty at Providence College.

The five week series for adults, Workshop in Skills for Parents, will be held on Tuesdays from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. starting February 6. Leader will be Marion J. Goldsmith, school guidance counselor and consultant with the Rhode Island State Department of Education.

Advance registration is required. Further information may be obtained by calling 861-8800.

REFUSES

NEW YORK — The United Nations office in Moscow has refused to accept a petition from 239 Jews urging UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim to investigate violations of human rights in the Soviet Union, it was reported here. Several of the signers were told that a UN administrative order prevented the officials of the organization from accepting petitions from individuals.

Artifacts Recovered In Sea Near Haifa Throw Light On Phoenician Worship

NEW YORK—About 2,500 years ago, a merchant ship sank within sight of the ancient Phoenician coast, north of the present Israeli city of Haifa. The cargo—commonplace then, but of great archeological interest today—included earthen vases and votive figurines of the Phoenician goddess Tanit.

A team of divers and marine archeologists from the University of Haifa has recovered many of the artifacts, which the experts consider of "paramount importance to the study of cultural and economic interrelationships" between the Phoenician homeland and its principal colony at Carthage.

Dr. Elisha Linder of the university's Center for Maritime Studies said in an interview here recently that the Tanit figurines were the "first of their type" ever discovered.

Dr. Linder reported on the discovery and the entire recovery project recently at the International Conference on Underwater Archeology. The conference was held in St. Paul, Minnesota.

Only Female Deity

According to Dr. Linder, the shipwreck probably occurred in the fifth century B.C. The ship may have been coming from Carthage, or perhaps Cyprus.

The discovery, Dr. Linder said, should assist archeologists in determining how widespread was the worship of Tanit, goddess of fertility and the only known female deity of the Phoenician world.

Previously, archeologists had found only drawings and symbols of the goddess and impressions on bronze coins, and these came primarily from excavations at the site of Carthage in North Africa. Carthage stood where present-day Tunisia is.

The clay Yigurines, ranging in height from six to 15 inches, seemed to have been mass produced from molds, Dr. Linder said. Most of them showed the goddess with her right hand raised in a gesture of blessing and with her left hand over her breast.

On the pedestal is the insignia of the goddess — a triangle topped by a disk and separated by a horizontal line. The symbol has been seen on many artifacts found at Carthage.

Over 200 Recovered

Dr. Linder said that more than 200 figurines had been recovered from the wreck since it was found in 1971 by a spear-fishing diver. A systematic expedition was started last October by the University of Haifa, the Undersea Exploration Society of Israel and the National Maritime Museum of Haifa.

The artifacts lie under 30 to 40 feet of water off the coast of Shavei Zion, an Israeli town halfway between Haifa, and the Lebanese city of Sur, which is the site of the Phoenician port city of Tyre.

Dr. Linder said that even more artifacts, encrusted in the hardened sediment and fairly well preserved, lie scattered over an area of more than 1,500 feet. More expeditions are being planned.

The expedition last fall was one of the first undertaken by the University of Haifa's new Center for Maritime Studies, of which Dr. Linder is the acting chairman and lecturer in ancient seafaring.

The center plans to concentrate its teaching and research in marine archeology, modern shipping economics and marine resources and environmental studies.

WARNS OF THREAT

WASHINGTON — Norman D. Tilles of Pawtucket, national commander of the Jewish War Veterans, warned that the impending energy crisis facing the U.S. must not be used as a weapon over Israel's had to force an unfavorable peace settlement with the Arabs. For years, he said, "Arabists in the State Department and elsewhere have been using our need for Arab oil as an argument that the U.S. must treat the Arabs with kid gloves." But, he noted, it is in the Arabs interest "to supply the U.S. oil as much as it is in our interest to buy it, so the sword cuts both ways and Israel need not be the victim of an international energy crunch."

PALESTINIANS . . .

under which the integration process took place appear to have created new resentments and increased animosities.

Palestinian labourers working in Israel don't measure their present lot with the pre-occupation situation but with that of their Jewish workmates. They also feel themselves to be victims of an intolerable discrimination. In this respect, the case of Khalil M. living in the Gaza Strip, is typical.

This 40-year-old mason, apolitical, a Christian with a large family, is fluent in Hebrew, having worked for Jewish employers since 1969. As he put it: "Personally, my buying power has not improved since the occupation. Sure, my salary has tripled, but the cost of living has quadrupled. It's only due to the incomes of my mother and my young son that we're able to make ends meet. I do the work of a foreman without the official designation and I earn half as much as a Jew who has. That's because my boss insisted that I be considered a manual worker. I'm paid by the day. I have neither the right to a day off nor to a paid annual vacation nor to social benefits.

"I can be fired at any time without advance notice or compensation. As a foreigner, I'm not allowed to join a labour union. I'm forbidden by law to live in Israel even if I work there. I'm not in a financial or physical condition to travel four hours daily to and from work. Therefore, I sleep in the open air on the work site with my boss's permission and, probably, the tacit agreement of the police. Once a week, I come home to spend the day with my wife and family."

According to the latest figures furnished by a spokesman for the military administration of the occupied territories, some 70,000 Palestinians, representing about half the labour force of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, are in a similar situation. Another 20,000 labourers work for Arab firms in the occupied territories which are regular suppliers for Israeli industries, especially for construction materials, clothing, furniture, leather goods, and confectionary.

These Israeli firms take advantage of the relatively low Arab production costs. In this way, Israeli businessmen kill two birds with one stone; they assure themselves of cheaper labour than in Israel and they create and increased buying power in the occupied territories for their products. In this respect, it should be noted that the occupied territories have become the world's second best customer for Israeli products (excluding diamonds), ranking just behind the U.S. and ahead of Britain.

For its part, the Palestinian bourgeoisie has been affected in different ways by economic integration. The exporters and manufacturers state, albeit with some reticence, that their turnover is constantly expanding. They view this as a natural occurrence, but it is, in fact, due to the financial and fiscal facilities offered to them as they are to their Jewish counterparts by the Israeli Government. However, those interviewed were worried by the prospect of massive Jewish capital investments, officially authorised in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip since October 8, 1972.

Already competition from Israeli finished products flooding the market, rising prices, and the critical labour shortage have dealt harsh blows to the small and medium-sized plant owners, artisans, and part of the farming population. Some have been forced to abandon their lands and businesses to seek work in Israel. On the other hand, the intellectuals despair of finding openings in a country which can boast of having one of the world's highest rates of university graduates.

"We are stateless persons," Repeated like a litany, this lament is heard all over the Middle East from the Israeli Arabs of Nazareth to the Palestinians of Kuwait. Under occupation rule in Judea and Samaria (Israeli designation for the West Bank), or subject to the caprices of Arab governments, be they friendly or antagonistic, they are treated as foreigners. They remain unassimilated and frequently inassimilable. Their Arab "brothers" have disparagingly dubbed them the "Jews of the Middle East."

Enviied, feared, suspected or despised, the Palestinians of the Diaspora are progressively being excluded from, if indeed they were ever integrated into, developing societies which are producing their own working classes, bourgeoisie, technicians, and elite. Everywhere, in the refugee camps of Jordan, Syria, and Lebanon, urchins and the aged persist, a quarter of a century after the founding of Israel, in giving voice to their obsession just as the Jews had for centuries: "Nahnou 'A'edoun!" (We shall return). Ironically there is a simultaneous emigration of their former compatriots residing on the West Bank, in the Gaza Strip, and in Israel to more clement lands.

Recently, the youth movement of the Israeli Mapam labour party put out a very moving poster. It showed a man, half of whose face was that of a Russian Jew and the other that of a Palestinian Arab, with the caption: "Every man has a right to a country." A noble sentiment, but one which these days is throwing into relief a cruel contrast.

A common sight at Tel-Aviv airport is to observe two groups of baggage-laden people who eye one another as their paths cross. One group, fair with Slavic features, is made up of Muscovite intellectuals or Georgian farmers returning to the ancestral land of the Hebrews. The others, swarthy with semitic features, are artisans from Hebron or intellectuals from Gaza who are leaving their country for good for lands as far distant as Canada or Australia. For diametrically opposed reasons, both groups sometimes find it hard to control their emotions.

Palestinians abroad regard themselves as expatriates: they see the apparent resignation of their brothers in the face of Jerusalem's integrationist tactics as basically an expression of impotence.

NOTE INCREASE

LONDON — Security authorities at London's airports are investigating a recent increase in the number of men, allegedly crew members, being brought into London by Arab airlines. The entire crew of one Arab airliner was refused admission by immigration officers recently because they did not have the required visas. The alleged crew members travelled in civilian clothing.

SUCCESSFUL INVESTING

ROGER E. SPEAR

Three Purchase Recommendations

Q: Would you please send me the names of some companies that have a bright future. I would like to invest in some stocks. A.H.

Q: I am interested in investing in common stock. Would you list a few good prospects? G.S.

A: Three promising buy candidates for long-term appreciation — American Express (OTC), Pitney-Bowes (NYSE) and V.F. Corporation (NYSE) — represent three diverse industry groups. American Express, personal services; Pitney-Bowes, office equipment and V.F., apparel. In the past five years American and V.F. Corporation have compiled outstanding growth records with earnings increasing at an average annual rate of 18% and 15%, respectively.

Pitney, which is recommended for its turnaround potential, reported disappointing earnings in 1970 and 1971. For the year ended December, a 15% to 20% rebound in profits is anticipated. Demand for the company's mailing equipment has been gaining momentum and Pitney's copier business has expanded significantly since 1967 when the firm entered this market. A meaningful profit contribution is looked for from the copier division this year. However, it is the company's 50%-owned Pitney-Bowes-Alplex affiliate that should materially boost earnings over the next three to five years. PBA has developed a point-of-sale computerized cash register system for retailers which has been very well received by the industry and as of September 1972, order backlog stood at $28 million.

American Express, best known for its comprehensive blanketing of the entire field of travel, also owns six mutual funds, an insurance company, an underwriting and securities firm and an international banking operation. For 1973, earnings should reach $2 a share versus an estimated $1.75 for the year just ended. Although shares command a rich 32x multiple, earnings growth justifies the premium.

V.F., through the acquisition of H.D. Lee in 1969 and Kay Windsor in 1971, broadened its product base and improved its growth potential. V.F. should continue to turn in above average results aided by aggressive management, a strong marketing organization and integrated operations.

Simmons Shares Should Bounce Back

Q: I hold shares of Simmons Company (NYSE) which I bought on a monthly investment plan. Why hasn't this stock gone up in price with the market? What would you recommend I do with my shares? A.M.

A: Although shares have not exhibited very robust market action in recent months, continued patience should prove worthwhile. Since 1969, earnings have moved sideways, a factor which has been reflected in share price action. Earnings recovery, begun in the final 1971 quarter and reestablished in the second and third interim periods of 1972, should foster a market reappraisal this year. Assuming that the recent spurt in consumer spending continues to develop and that the rate of new construction remains firm, Simmons could reap the benefits.

Sales in the first nine months of 1972 rose 9%, a rate which should carry over into the current year. With consumers apparently loosening the purse strings and buying the higher priced product line, profit margins should widen this year. Thus, a tentative earnings projection of $2 to $2.10 a share appears reasonable. This estimate also assumes expansion in Simmons' institutional sales and consumer acceptance of the recently introduced Polyceel foam mattress. Gradual earnings growth on a modestly upgraded P/E multiple should be forthcoming in the next several quarters. Shares should be held.

Q: I have been investing monthly in a mutual fund since the beginning of 1970. The price of the fund has increased 70% over that period. What do you think? J.W.

A: You have made a very fortunate choice of funds. Over the three years, your fund has averaged 23% appreciation annually. By comparison the Standard & Poor 500 Stock Average appreciated 13% annually over the same period as did a speculative fund average. As you can see your investment choice has achieved an above average performance record since 1970. Keep in mind, however, that in the performance race leadership is constantly shifting and you might well hedge your position by diversification.

Turning Tide For Celanese

Q: We are in our seventies so are primarily interested in income. Several years ago we purchased 100 shares of Celanese $7 Cumulative Second Preferred (OTC) at $117 per share. It is no longer quoted but I believe it has declined substantially. Do you believe the dividend is safe and that the stock might come back? R.S.

A: As a general rule strat preferreds such as you hold trade on a yield basis. In other words, the shares will move up or down in price depending on the current overall level of interest rates. If 7% is the norm for interest rates and a preferred pays only $5 the trading price will drop to a level where the yield is consistent with the norm. However, when adverse corporate developments undermine a company's earnings and pose a threat to the dividend, preferred shares will decline to the point where the yield is higher than the general current level of interest rates. Although the dividend in this case appears secure, some of the drop in share price reflects the problems which plagued Celanese in 1972.

Celanese derives a substantial portion of revenues from its acetate fiber business, a market which has been under pressure for the past year. Changing style trends away from fabrics, which are bounded with acetate tricot, plus the concurrent drop in acetate prices penalized earnings by approximately $1 per share last year. In the face of a now-firming price trend for the fiber, orders are expected to increase about 5% for 1973.

The second negative in this situation is the Columbia Cellulose subsidiary which has been operating at a loss. In 1971 Celanese's share of the loss was $15.8 million. This was significantly reduced during 1972. Divestiture of various segments of this operation is in the works.

The 7% preferred is a very limited issue — 25,638 shares outstanding — which seldom trades. The most recent transaction was at the $80 level. Hold shares for their generous 8.75% return and their recovery potential.

Your Money's Worth

If You're Turned Down For Credit

Hank R., a young engineer with a wife and two babies, lost his job in the aerospace cutbacks on Long Island a few years back and, in the process, he got into some serious debt trouble. Now, though, Hank has a good, well paying, secure job in the Midwest, and recently he applied for a home mortgage. When asked the routine questions about his debt history, he tried to cover up his past problems. The bank turned him down.

It had, of course, obtained a credit bureau report on Hank. All the information on Hank for the past seven years was in the report. What counted most against Hank was the fact that he had lied — for the bank also knew he had lost his job because of forces beyond his control and that he was in a secure job now.

"How do you get out of this bind?" Hank wrote. "What should I do?"

Hank should do plenty — and since hundreds of thousands of you may be in similar positions, the following guides can be of crucial importance to your future.

* If you are turned down for credit and if you believe this is unwarranted, take steps at once to have your credit status rechecked and corrected. Under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, effective April 25, 1971, you have a great new array of defenses against abuse of your credit status by credit bureaus, credit granters, etc. For example, among other things, you can now:

* Obtain, upon your own request and proper identification of yourself, from any consumer-reporting agency which issues a report on you, disclosure of all the information in your credit file — including the sources of that information on you.

* Get the names of all who have received from any consumer-reporting agency, employment reports on you within the past two years and the names of all others who have received credit reports about you within the past six months.

* Arrange for a reinvestigation of any item about you which you question.

* Have that item deleted from your record if the reinvestigation finds it to be inaccurate or if the item can no longer be verified.

* File a statement of about 100 words reporting your side of the story if the reinvestigation does not settle the matter — so that your side will be included in any future reports containing the item.

* See to it, if an item is deleted or a statement added to your file, that the credit bureau gives this information to those who have received employment reports about you within the past two years or regular credit reports about you in the past six months.

* Have your record explained to you in detail and have it reviewed without charge if in the past 30 days you have been denied credit because of information in a credit report or if you have received a notice from a collection department affiliated with the credit bureau. And, under the same circumstances, have previous recipients of information about you notified without charge if an item is deleted or a statement from you is added.

These are extraordinarily valuable rights. For the first time, you have the right under the law to obtain information. The law also forbids credit bureaus to send out adverse information which is more than seven years old, although bankruptcies may be reported for 14 years. There are no time limits on information on you if you apply for a loan or insur-

NO UN OBSERVERS
JERUSALEM — Defense Minister Moshe Dayan said that "Israel must not leave anything to chance in any peace arrangements with the Arab States." He said Israel would have to get rid of the UN observers and must not agree again to demilitarized zones or accept "pious guarantees from other nations." Experience has shown that these only establish a wedge between Israel and the Arabs he explained. "Our peace objective must be to live together peacefully as we are doing now with the Arabs of the area," he said.

SENTENCED TO JAIL
JERUSALEM — A yeshiva student who screamed "Nazis get out" at policemen who were trying to control a demonstration was sentenced to four months in jail by a judge here. Moshe Deutsch, 23, took part in a mass protest of religious persons against the imprisonment of yeshiva students who firebombed a "sex shop" in Tel Aviv. "This villain... says that the study of Torah is his sole occupation," the judge said. "He is one of whom it can be said that his mouth is full of the praise of the Lord and the vermin of hatred crawls in his heart. "Who knows how many of the policemen themselves are the survivors of the Nazi slaughter?" the judge asked.

The Treasure Chest

Of Outstanding Offers and Opportunities

By Alan Shawn Feinstein

Hello, again, here's what we have for this month.

You can get several free issues of what is considered the fairest newspaper in the U.S. — the Christian Science Monitor. Write them at Box 125, Astor Station, Boston, Massachusetts 02123.

Japan anyone? If you're thinking of a vacation there, get these two books: Before You Leave for the Orient and Parley-Vous Japanese. The former is a 24 page guide on interesting facts you should know on visiting and shopping in Japan while the latter is useful Japanese words and expressions you should learn. Both yours free from Japan Air Lines, Box 1160, Radio City Station, New York, New York 10019.

Interested in investing? Third market brokerage houses can frequently save you money when buying or selling stock, if you deal in the actively traded stocks. How? Because their commissions are much lower than other brokerage houses. The third market house I've found that charges the least commission of all is Stock/Cross, 8 Oliver Street, Boston, Massachusetts. Write them and they'll send you full details.

If you're interested in investing without paying any commissions, check into no-load mutual funds. You can get, free, the latest issue of the United Business Service Mutual Fund Advisory Service. Send for this. It's worth reading. Their address is 212 Newbury Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

Or, if you're interested in stocks, there are two good stock advisory services that will send you your current issues free upon request: The Fargo Index, P.O. Drawer K, Novato, California 94947 and Key-Volume Strategies, Inc., P.O. Box 407, White Plains, New York 10602.

Want a night's royal entertainment? See The Royal Hunt of the Sun at the Trinity Theatre. Ah, there's a production that will grab you. Highly recommended.

That's all for now, my friends. Adieu until next month.

 (Alan Shawn Feinstein is a syndicated columnist. He is author of Making Your Money Grow, Folk Tales from Siam, and other books.)

PROTEST ORDERS

TEL AVIV — About 500 former Ikrit-Baram residents assembled outside the Baram church, the only structure still intact in that one-time border village, to protest military orders closing the area. The demonstration was peaceful and Israeli authorities did not intervene even though the assembly violated security regulations. A spokesman for the villagers, noting that Israel was established on the principles of liberty, justice and equality, said the villagers would continue to struggle for those principles until they are permitted to return to their former homes.

JUDAIC STUDIES

DURHAM, N.C. — A major fund-raising effort has been launched to provide financial support for a new comprehensive cooperative program in Judaic Studies at Duke University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Plans for the program were announced in a statement issued jointly by Duke president Terry Sanford and UNC-CH chancellor N. Ferebee Taylor. According to the announcement, development of the program will be financed by an endowment fund being established through the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Evans of Durham who have committed themselves to raising initially $500,000 through alumni of the two universities and other sources in North Carolina and elsewhere in the Southeast.
