Anti-Defamation League Hopes For Passage Of Civil Rights Legislation

WASHINGTON — The Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith took an optimistic view this week of the chances for pas-sage of civil rights legislation this week of the chances for passage of civil rights legislation this year.

In its annual report on Congress and civil rights, the league said President Johnson had made clear "a determination to pass the civil rights bill."

"Because the President has put his heart and his unmatched knowledge of Congress behind the bill," the league said, "and because it is a Southerner in the White House, who will be appealing to the South, the bill has become more possible to pass."

The report warned, however, against weakening of the bill by what Mr. Johnson has on occasion called "the art of the possible."

"Too often," the report said, "the 'possible' implied a watereddown result obtained without struggle, tears or 'challenge to the powers-that-be. But what is possible without struggle is quite different from what is possible with sweat and tears."

Officials, Press Pleased With Dignity Characterizing Papal Tour Of Israel

JERUSALEM — The visit of Pope Paul VI to Israel was viewed in this country this week with almost unqualified satisfaction according to a New York Times

Israeli officials, the press and vate persons were pleased with Israeli officials, the press and private persons were pleased with the dignity and efficiency that characterized the papal tour of Christian holy places.

There was a sense of relief that everything had gone off so well. It was felt that one result might be a definitive vote at the third session of the Ecumenical Council next fall on the draft proposal that rejects the concept that Jews were responsible for Christ's death.

It also was felt that general attitudes about Jewish-Roman Catholic relations would be fav-orably affected by the successful visit.

Premier Levi Eshkol said in a statement that "the people of Israel were deeply impressed by the lofty personality of the Pope and by his emphasis on the need for peace, reconciliation and friendship."

The Arab League announced last week that the Heads of all but two Arab States had accepted President Nasser's invitation to a meeting to discuss Israel's project to draw off water from the Sea of Galilee. The Israelis will be ready to begin during the coming year, and Arab Governments have always insisted that they will take the turning on of the taps as an act of war. as an act of war.

But President Nasser's calling of a summit con-ference does not mean that the war is now more liketerence does not mean that the war is now more likely — on the contrary. For President Nasser clearly has no desire to attack just now. No doubt he would vigorously deny that he is any less anti-Israel than the firebreathing Syrians; but he is more responsible. As one of the few successful Arab statesmen of the past 10 years he has more to lose if things go wrong; moreover, he and the Syrians know well that his country would have to bear the main burden of the war effort effort.

When the Chiefs of Staff of the Arab countries met earlier last month to plan action on the Jordan waters it was rumoured that the Egyptian representative had refused to commit his army. This version seemed confirmed by a subsequent article by the editor of the influential Cairo review "Ros al-Yussef." He said that the Arab enemies of the United Arab Republic were planning to embroil her in a war over the Jordan waters so that they could "stab her in the back." The UAR, he argued, would refuse to get embroiled; it would choose its own time for the battle against Israel, and that would not be before the complete political union of the Arab peoples. When the Chiefs of Staff of the Arab countries met rael, and that would not be before the complete political union of the Arab peoples.

The article raised a storm in the other Arab countries — not least in Jordan, where the Government has weakened the Arab case by itself diverting river waters unilaterally. President Nasser, tactician as he is, has now thrown back to his accusers the responsibility of decision. It is easy for underlings to make belligerent speeches, but declarations of war can come only from the very top. The President cannot now be reproached for failing to take an anti-Zionist initiative, but he can be confident that the conference he is summoning will prove his point: that the Arab States are moning will prove his point: that the Arab States are not sufficiently united to wage a war, let alone win it.

FROM FRIDAY TO FRIDAY A Fraternal Order That Dared To Be Different

By Beryl Segal

Fifty years ago a small group of immigrants formed the organization known as the Jewish National Workers Alliance. The organization was to be a fraternal order with all the ingredients of such groups in America. Sick benefits, death insurance, burial, and other kinds of protection that menerits, death insurance, burial, and other kinds of protection that the other fraternal orders provide. But the J.N.W.A. had something else for its members. They were benefits of the spirit that the other orders neglected, and that made all the difference in the world. the world.

The order was to live up to its name, or there was no reason for its existence.

It was Jewish, and therefore, its members were to live a Jewish life to its fullest. Observe Jewish Festivals and celebrate them in their homes and as a group. Talk Yiddish and teach their children the tongue of their parents. Cherish the culture of their people and show their children the beauty and the grandeur of being a Jew.

The young organization had a hard struggle at the beginning. No immigrant would burden himself with such duties and obligations. But the first founders of the order were idealists. Most of them were also Poale Zion, Labor Zionists. They believed in what they asked others to do. They were willing to do it themselves. The order was to be in their image or nothing at all.

Krasna had missed spending Christmas at home because he was in Hollywood defending a plagiarism lawsuit. Krasna had a chance to settle it for $5,000, but insisted on fighting it. To have settled, he felt, would have encouraged others to sue novelists, playwrights and songwriters. Such plagiarism suits invariably follow Levin's sister works in his production office, and his brother-inlaw conducts the orchestra at his musical. "Sure I employ these close relatives," he said. "Why not? Nepotism begins at home."

The elephants accompanied the circus to Vienna and now, fully trained, are an route to Kenya.

Joseph E. Levine recently said that, as great as they are, art films don't fill the need of film exchanges who are constantly demanding more commercial pictures. "Art films do well in major cities," said the famous distributor and Paramount co-producer, "but a movie made in Hollywood with the same effort, time and money will get 5,000 more bookings."

Levine explained that American theaters aren't agreed about the public's reception of art pictures. As a result, most exhibitors hesitate to book them.

Prime example of art pictures, Eugene O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey Into Night" cost $525,000 to make. "It has steadily lost money," admitted Levine sadly.

Asked if his next film, "When Love Is Gone," starring Susan Hayward and Bette Dayls, will include sex, Levine said grinning, "What other kind of movies can you make today?"

Levine paid tribute to "Zula," shot in Africa at a cost of several million dollars. He praised its producer who had never produced a picture and its director who had never directed. "It will be a fabulous movie," he promised. "I'm highly enthused about it."

deal, Levine said that opportunities in Africa, Italy and France will keep him busy abroad.

He laughed when a newsman inquired, "Is there any picture strong enough to make you an important international producer?" He quipped, "I AM an important international producer?" At least, I thought I was."

At the same meeting, Jack Karp, Paramount's vice president, predicted that "Carpetbaggers" and "When Love Is Gone" will emerge as two of Paramount's biggest pictures. He boasted, "Joe Levine took 10 days to think about "When Love Is Gone.' I took 10 minutes to give if the go sign."

"Is there any nudity in "The Carpetbaggers'?" asked a reporter. "What made you ask that?" wondered Karp. Replied the newsman, "That's the way Harold Robbins writes. I'd expect it."

Assured Karp, "There is no nudity in 'The Carpetbaggers' but sex overtones necessarily remain. To ease your anxiety, we did clean up Robbins' story."

this means that when he lists with one Realtor, many other Realtors will have the complete data plus a picture of his property readily available to potential buyers. The house is then shown through the Realtor who listed it. This provides the greatest possible exposure of the property to all potential customers. This has never before been possible in Providence. It is expected that listings in the Service will rise about 400% and that pictures and data for upwards of 2500 homes will thus be available to home buyers during the year.

nomes will thus be available to home buyers during the year. Wherever this type of Multiple Listing Service is used, buyers find their selection of a home greatly facilitated and sellers find greater facilitated and sellers findgreater activity and usually a quicker sale of their property. Another wonderful thing about this new service is that there is no added cost to either the buyer or the seller. Member Realtors have always corporated with each other buy this Member Realtors have always cooperated with each other but this expanded Multiple Listing Service, which has been under study by the Board of Realtors for nearly a year, makes it easier. Now each Realtor will have pictures and full information on all listings before him at all times. Finding homes for his clients will be greatly speeded. The home buyer will also be able to select homes he would like to see from scores of possibilities when he contacts the Realtor of his choice.

The mechanics of placing a home in the Multiple Listing Service are simple; the owner who vice are simple; the owner who wishes to sell will select the Real-tor Multiple Listing Service mem-ber he wishes to list his home. This Realtor will automatically (and without additional cost) place the home in the Multiple Listing Ser-vice. When another Realtor wishes to show the property, arrange-ments are made with the listing Realtor and one appointment made. Thus the seller is working with just one Realtor but prospects of many other Realtors are avail-able to him thru the Multiple List-ing Service. ing Service.

No one Realtor can individually list all homes going on the market. Potentially, he can make a vast majority of them available thru R the new Multiple Listing Service. The benefits to buyer and seller will be tremendous as the Service will be tremendous as the Service. grows during the coming year. 125 cities must be right! This is the finest method of home mer-chandising in existence today.

LET'S OVER

By Herman Goldberg

Executive Director, Jewish Family & Children's Service

A parent mentioned to me the other day that she was happy that her child liked adventure. This desire for adventure meant to her that her child was trying out his adjustment in the world.

This certainly is a helpful viewpoint. Children need not only physical activity, but also mental and emotional activity. Children eventually try to find out what is in the world around them, and when things do not work out just right, they try to do what they can to make it work right for them. The parent at such times, tries to see that the difficulties which the child is having are just enough to keep him trying. However, the parent must guard against the fact that the child runs into frequent failure and discouragement.

New experiences, or adventure, are important for children because they develop their abilities by freedom to exercise them through making decisions and meeting difficulties. Parental love must be brave enough to allow the loved child needed adventure and risks. The better things that parents always want for their children does not always have to be something easier.

Experiences in independence and responsibility and in successful achievement build self-confidence, self respect and resourcefulness. When a child accomplishes something in self-help, self-expression or service to others, he has not only a deep human satisfaction in the results, but he is also warmed by the approval of others.

Yet sometimes parents hesitate to give this approval, even if earned. Perhaps this is because of a tendency to push and hurry children into maturity. Expecting too much of a child, or setting standards too high, may cause a child to become nervous or tense. Goals should be readily attainable so that the child's efforts will often be reqarded by success. Even if he goes forward slowly, at least it will be with confidence. It takes time to grow, even with adventures along the way.

even with adventures along the way.

Here, as in other parental relationships, example by the parents and their companionship are important. Parents, too, should have enthusiasm for the fun of learning new things. Sharing the pleasures of exploring and learning, as was being done by the parent who mentioned adventure, strengthens cooperation and love.

On magnetic tape are up to 3 million items on all stocks on the New York Stock Exchange from 1926 through 1960. If unraveled, the tape would cover a distance of 3 1/2 miles, It took the Center years just to gather the data, but it took the computer only 20 minutes to make up to 400 million calculations for the first study.

Understandably, neither Lorie nor Fisher would forecast results of studies still to be made. As an indication of the complexities inindication of the complexities in-volved, before the computer can answer the question on the sound-ness of the Dow Theory of stock market forecasting — the most famous of all technical theories— Lorie and Fisher must figure out how to state the theory so the computer can "understand" it. Not being so restrained, though, I'll venture some educated guesses.

(1) Most strictly technical forecasting theories will turn out to be next to useless. "If you're only watching the tape, you're dead."

(2) A clear relationship will be shown between a company's earnings-dividend trend and the price

"we're all frauds and we're notfrauds."

Crossing To Jordan

The Arab League announced last week that the Heads of all but two Arab States had accepted President Nasser's invitation to a meeting to discuss Israel's project to draw off water from the Sea of Galilee. The Israelis will be ready to begin during the coming year, and Arab Governments have always insisted that they will take the turning on of the taps as an act of war. as an act of war as an act of war.

But President Nasser's calling of a summit conference does not mean that the war is now more likely—on the contrary. For President Nasser clearly has no desire to attack just now. No doubt he would vigorously deny that he is any less anti-Israel than the firebreathing Syrians; but he is more responsible. As one of the few successful Arab statesmen of the past 10 years he has more to lose if things go wrong; moreover, he and the Syrians know well that his country would have to bear the main burden of the war effort.

When the Chiefs of Staff of the Arab countries met When the Chiefs of Staff of the Arab countries met earlier last month to plan action on the Jordan waters it was rumoured that the Egyptian representative had refused to commit his army. This version seemed confirmed by a subsequent article by the editor of the influential Cairo review "Ros al-Yussef." He said that the Arab enemies of the United Arab Republic were planning to embroil her in a war over the Jordan waters so that they could "stab her in the back." The UAR, he argued, would refuse to get embroiled; it would choose its own time for the battle against Israel, and that would not be before the complete political rael, and that would not be before the complete political union of the Arab peoples.

The article raised a storm in the other Arab countries — not least in Jordan, where the Government has weakened the Arab case by itself diverting river waters unilaterally. President Nasser, tactician as he is the power through people to his acquisers the response. waters unitaterally. President Nasser, tactician as he is, has now thrown back to his accusers the responsibility of decision. It is easy for underlings to make belligerent speeches, but declarations of war can come only from the very top. The President cannot now be reproached for failing to take an anti-Zionist initiative, but he can be confident that the conference he is sumparing will prove his point, that the Arab States are moning will prove his point: that the Arab States are not sufficiently united to wage a war, let alone win it.

FROM FRIDAY TO FRIDAY A Fraternal Order That Dared To Be Different

By Beryl Segal

Fifty years ago a small group of immigrants formed the organization known as the Jewish National Workers Alliance. The organization was to be a fraternal order with all the ingredients of such groups in America. Sick benefits, death insurance, burial, and other kinds of protection that the other fraternal orders provide. But the J.N.W.A. had something else for its members. They were benefits of the spirit that the other orders neglected, and that made all the difference in the world.

The order was to live up to its name, or there was no reason the world.

The order was to live up to its name, or there was no reason for its existence.

It was Jewish, and therefore, its members were to live a Jewish life to its fullest. Observe Jewish Festivals and celebrate them in their homes and as a group. Talk Yiddish and teach their children the tongue of their parents. Cherish the culture of their people and show their children the beauty and the grandeur of being a Jew.

It was to be national and its members were to strive for a complete national life. Stand shoulder against the tide of assimilation. Fight for Jewishrights here and abroad. Strive for a Jewish homeland and help in every effort to make this dream come

It was a Workers Alliance and its members were expected to stand on the side of Labor in all its struggles.

The young organization had a hard struggle at the beginning. No immigrant would burden himself with such duties and obligations. But the first founders of the order were idealists. Most of them were also Poale Zion, Labor Zionists.
They believed in what they asked others to do. They were willing to do it themselves. The order was to be in their image or nothing

The J.N.W.A. was co-sponsor of the Teachers Seminar which is today about to become a Jewish college with all the privileges and rights of an institute of higher

But above all, the J.N.W.A., together with the other members of the Labor Zionist group has seen the rebuilding of Zion, a dream that no one dared to dream. And that dream became a reality because of the work of every member, because of the dollars that every member gave and belothat every member gave and help-ed to get from others, because the drives and the special drives

In Providence the Jewish National Workers Alliance has two branches, small but serving as yeast in a baker's trough, stimulating others to work and to give, while working and giving itself to every Jewish cause.

Hollywood . . .

By Barney Glazer

Joseph E. Levine recently said Joseph E. Levine recently said that, as great as they are, art films don't fill the need of film exchanges who are constantly demanding more commercial pictures. "Art films do well in major cities," said the famous distributor and Paramount comprehense." distributor and Paramount co-producer, "but a movie made in Hollywood with the same effort, time and money will get 5,000 more bookings."

Levine explained that American theaters aren't agreed about the public's reception of art pictures. As a result, most exhibitors hesitate to book them.

Eugene O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey Into Night" cost $525,000

money," admitted Levine sadly.

Asked if his next film, "When Love Is Gone," starring Susan
Hayward and Bette Davis, will include sex, Levine said grinning.

Hayward and Bette Davis, will include sex, Levine said grinning, "What other kind of movies can you make today?"

Thus did the man who stays on top of the distribution pile by correctly feeling the boxoffice pulse make it clear he is catering to public demand when he uses sex in his films.

Levine paid tribute to "Zula," shot in Africa at a cost of several million dollars. He praised its producer who had never produced a picture and its director who had never directed. "It will be a fabulous movie," he promised. "I'm highly enthused about it."

deal, Levine said that opportunities in Africa, Italy and France will keep him busy abroad.

He laughed when a newsman inquired, "Is there any picture strong enough to make you an important international producer?" He quipped, "I AM an important international producer. At least, I thought I was."

At the same meeting, Jack Karp, Paramount's vice president, predicted that "Carpetbaggers" and "When Love Is Gone" will emerge as two of Paramount's biggest pictures. He boasted, "Joe Levine took 10 days to think about 'When Love Is Gone.' I took 10 minutes to give it the go sign." "Is there any nudity in 'The Carpetbaggers'?" asked a reporter. "What made you ask that?" wondered Karp. Replied the newsman, "That's the way Harold Robbins writes. I'd expect it."

Assured Karp, "There is no nudity in 'The Carpetbaggers' him the Carpetbaggers' him sex overtones necessarily remain. To ease your anxiety, we did
