Rabbi Fishbein To Speak On Jewish Family Life At Temple Sinai, Warwick

Rabbi Irwin H. Fishbein, a native of Providence and director of the Rabbinic Center for Research and Counseling in Westfield, New Jersey, will be the pulpit guest of Temple Sinai, Warwick, on Friday evening, November 11, at 8:30 p.m. He will speak on "New Perspectives for the Jewish Family." On Sunday morning, November 13, at 10 a.m., Rabbi Fishbein, joined by his wife, Barbara Teath Fishbein, also a native of Providence, will lead a discussion on the topic "Coping with Inter-marriage."

Mrs. Fishbein, who is an M.S.W. candidate at the Columbia University School of Social Work, is a staff therapist at the Whitney Community Guidance Center in Princeton, New Jersey. She also serves as mother-infant facilitator, research coordinator, and staff therapist for the Rabbinic Center which provides individual, family, and group psychotherapy on a graduated-fee basis to residents of the New York-New Jersey metropolitan area. She is a magna cum laude graduate of Fairleigh Dickinson University where she majored in psychology and sociology. Her honor's thesis was titled "The Impact of Childhood and Familial Influences Upon a Propensity Toward Inter-marriage."

Rabbi Fishbein received the Doctor of Ministry degree from the Department of Clinical Psychology at Andover-Newton Theological School. A licensed marriage and family therapist, he combines traditional rabbinic background with the skills of a trained psychotherapist and has pioneered in developing a counseling rabbinic and in reclaiming for the rabbi this vital role which he served so effectively in the past.

Dr. Fishbein received his clinical training at the Institutes of Religion and Health in New York where he completed three post-graduate residencies, in Individual Psychotherapy, Marriage and Family Counseling, and in Group Psychotherapy. He is the first member of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, the rabbinic arm of the Reform Judaism, to be admitted to full membership in the American Group Psychotherapy Association. He is also a clinical member of the American Association of Marriage and Family Counselors and one of only six rabbis to have achieved the status of Fellow in the American Association of Pastoral Counselors.

Dr. Fishbein is currently serving as chairman of the Committee on Premarital Counseling for the Northern New Jersey District of the New Jersey Association of Marriage and Family Counselors. His articles on marriage and the family have appeared in many local and national publications.

Before assuming his present position, he served for 15 years as a congregational rabbi and navy chaplain. He was ordained with honors at the Hebrew Union College and is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Brown University. Both Dr. and Mrs. Fishbein are graduates of Classical High School in Providence.

ABC Documentary On Palestinians Draws Protests

NEW YORK (JTA): The American Broadcasting Co. acknowledged last week that telephone response to its "News Closeup" program, "Terror in the Promised Land," aired in most of the country on October 30, was overwhelmingly negative. But an ABC spokesperson told the Jewish Telegraphic Agency that there was strong evidence that most of the protests were part of an organized campaign, probably encouraged by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith which has branded the broadcast a "totally one-sided pro-Arab terrorist film."

According to Mary Fifield, director of public relations for ABC News which produces the Closeup series, some 1500-plus negative phone calls were received by ABC in New York and other cities before the program was aired. She said most of these callers read from what appeared to be "prepared scripts" and that many of them were children.

Ms. Fifield said she took a number of calls from children the night of the broadcast. She said that when they were asked why they called, some replied, "because my Hebrew school teacher told me to" or the "rabbi told me to." She said she thought the ADL was responsible.

Protest Calls From All Over

Ms. Fifield said a similar number of calls were received during and after the hour-long program which was aired from 8-9 p.m. Eastern Standard Time and that these seemed "more bona fide." She said ABC in Washington received 45 call praising the program and 46 against.

"Terror in the Promised Land!" was aired in the Los Angeles area two Sundays ago in a different time slot. According to Ms. Fifield, the majority of protest calls there were received before the broadcast began. The hour-long documentary, made by ABC staff writer-producer Malcolm Clarke, carried no commercial advertising.

The usual commercial breaks were filled with public service messages broadcast free of charge. Fifield said that the ABC sales department had decided, on the day of broadcast, to "pull" all advertising because of the controversy generated by the broadcast. She explained that sponsors of Closeup buy the entire series as a package and that there was no time to advise advertisers of the controversy.

When reminded that the program had been scheduled months ago, Fifield maintained, nevertheless, that many advertisers were not aware of its content and that it was the decision of the sales department not to involve them with controversial material without their foreknowledge.

She could not say whether or not ABC lost revenue as a result or in what amount. She said the program drew a 10.7 rating and 16 share in New York and about the same in Chicago and Los Angeles. She said she believed this was average for a news documentary broadcast in prime time.

In a statement issued last week, ADL general counsel Arnold Forster said the ADL "was denied its request to preview the telecast." Fifield said it was ABC policy not to preview shows for "special interest groups" unless an endorsement was being sought. It was previewed for the press, including the Jewish Telegraphic Agency.

JCC To Hold Third Annual Craft Exhibit

Special events at the fair will include supervised activities for children under 12 and a bake sale. A raffle will include a handmade afghan, a bicycle, and a "mini-weekend" at the Marriott.

On Saturday night, November 18, the Friends of the Jewish Community Center will sponsor a Gala Preview from 8 to 11 p.m. A donation is required. Artists John Prip and Marie Tolukas of the Rhode Island School of Design, and Constance Leslie, a ceramic artist, will judge the works on Saturday night. Further information may be obtained by calling Lola Schwartz at the Jewish Community Center, 861-8800, or Hope Hirsch, 751-2824.

US In Israel To Survey New Bases

TEL AVIV (JTA)—A 17-man delegation of the United States Air Force and U.S. Army engineers technicians arrived in Israel this week for a 13-day visit to survey the technical aspects of the construction of two new air bases for Israel in the Negev. They will replace the bases in Sinai that Israel will abandon when it withdraws from that territory under the terms of the Camp David agreements. Brig.Gen. Paul Harton, who is heading the American team, said they will not make a financial evaluation but deal with technical, operational and constructional problems.

The Air Force technicians will inspect locations suggested by Israel Air Force experts. It was learned that one of the potential sites is at Tel Malhah, east of Beersheba. The engineers will concern themselves with the actual construction problems. A higher-level military mission from the Pentagon was also to have arrived in Israel for discussions of its long-term arms supplies needs from the U.S. That mission and a similar one to Egypt was postponed last week. No reason was given.

AT TRINITY SQUARE: Ricardo Pitts Wiley, left, and David Kennett are shown in a scene from Trinity Square Repertory's current upstairs theatre production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin: A History," written by Adrian Hall and Richard Cumming. Performances, which run through November 19, are at 8 p.m. on Tuesdays through Sundays and selected 2 p.m. matinees. Reservations may be made by calling 351-4242.

Uncle Tom's Cabin: A History Needs Tightening, Focusing

Trinity Square Repertory Company presents Uncle Tom's Cabin: A History, an original play written by Adrian Hall and Richard Cumming, directed by Hall, music arranged and directed by Cumming, setting by Matthew Jacobs, lighting by Eugene Lee, costumes by Vittorio Capece, choreography by Sharon Jenkins. The cast: Rob Anderson, Tom Loker; Dan Butler, Young George Shelby; Tim Donoghue, Phineas Fletcher; Monique Fowler, Little Eva; Ed Hall, George Harris; David C. Jones, Mr. Shelby; Melanie Jones, Marie St. Clare; David Kennett, Simon Legree; Gregg Little, Adolph; Howard London, Lawyer Marks; Derek Meader, George L. Aiken; Barbara Meek, Eliza and Dinah; Barbara Orson, Harriet Beecher Stowe; Tony Todd, Sam; Amy Van Nostrand, Ophelia St. Clare; Daniel Von Bargen, Augustine St. Clare; Rose Weaver, Topsy and Lucy; Ricardo Pitts-Wiley, Uncle Tom; Greg Young, Andy; and as the children, Sean M. Reilly and William Bailey III. The play is set in the American theater now and in the past.

Uncle Tom's Cabin: A History starts out as a lively combination of the original Uncle Tom and both cultural and theatrical history. The coherence of the play and history begins to dissolve after Act I, and in the final act gives way almost completely to a straightforward rendition of Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Played straight, those two-dimensional characters are almost too much for today's audience (which may be why Trinity Rep has added so much background material and created a new play). It is surprising to find that even a fairly tight scene from Mrs. Stowe's masterpiece becomes tiring sooner than it should; I think the nobility of half the characters and despicability of the others may have a great deal to do with it.

The first and most effective act is set within the framework of a narrated beginning and running reference to Mrs. Stowe, who sits at her writing table on stage left, moving in and out of the scene as a constant factor. Here the theatrical history—integral to the act—is embroidered with song, movement, one-liners, scenes here and there, all done with the quickness of hand that deceives the eye. But this kind of dramatic effort must be continuous, for if the audience begins to think instead of look, it is hard for the onstage action to recapture lost attention.

Act II begins to slow down: the music is slower, more mournful. The scenes are longer than they need to be. The characters are too good for this wicked world. In some kitchen scenes on the ole plantation, two black servants are played by white men dressed as women. There seems no need for their roles, which involve tedious inaction and bring one up short as what is onstage clashes unmistakably with what it's intended to be. If those scenes had worked, the routine reaction would have been simply that it's hard for a resident company to cast every role in a large production.

Everyone in the cast plays more than one part, which means that Legree and the slave catcher are played by the same person, and so are the two plantation ladies. A change of cast in these roles would have given variety in the straight scenes.

There are sparkling moments, not to be missed after Act I: Lucy's discovery that her baby has been taken from her; Ophelia's attempt to bring Yankee order into Dinah's kitchen and Dinah's reaction; and Mrs. St. Clare's temper tantrum when Ophelia tries to bully her into setting Tom free. Topsy is, like just about all the others, exactly what the book calls for, carelessly mendacious and endlessly exasperating but, underneath a lonely child.

Often the accuracy of a historical statement or assumption doesn't invite questioning, but in a play calling itself "a history" it is bothersome to be jerked back to reality by wondering if something is in fact accurate. Among such surprises—effective though it is as a theatrical gesture—is Dinah's corn-cob—I can't believe that the white folks would have tolerated a cook who smoked while making their breakfast. On the other hand, because the staging makes it unimportant, the use of whites and blacks as slaves in song sequences doesn't matter at all, and is scarcely noticeable.

The singing is very good, the costumes excellent, the choreography attractive, and the set diverting, but after Act I, this is no longer American theatrical history (that would need a play of its own, I think) based inextricably on Uncle Tom's Cabin. And after Act I, for all the good acting and pretty singing, things just don't come together as they should. Perhaps, by the end of next week revisions will have tightened and brought into focus the varied elements of this new play.

QUINTUPLETS BORN

JERUSALEM (JTA): Quintuplets born in Jerusalem recently are doing well, according to a Hadassah Medical Center spokesman. The quintuplets were born on October 20 to Sarah 43, and Yosef Vexler, 45, of Beersheba, following a fertility treatment. The three boys and two girls were delivered by Caesarean section. The Vexlers, who already have one child, live in a two-room apartment, but the Construction and Housing Ministry has already promised them a new four-room dwelling. Asked how she would face the new challenge, Mrs. Vexler said: "It's going to be difficult, but I shall manage. I love children."

FROM FRIDAY TO FRIDAY

My Grandfather,
Yehiel Lieberzon

By BERYL SEGAL

When my grandfather, Yehiel, received a call to come to Orinin as a Shohet and Bodek, his relatives were all against it. "Where is that Orinin?" they asked. "How will you leave your home town, Berdichev, where your ancestors lived, and where they are buried, and go to a Godforsaken place?" they argued.

Berdichev was near Kiev and Zhitomir, in the heart of the Ukraine. And Orinin? Whoever heard of Orinin? It was a frontier town, near the Austro-Hungarian border, full of "ganovim," thieves. Every horse stolen anywhere on the Ukraine showed up in Orinin from where it was transported to nearby Austria by the Liveranten, horse thieves.

Berdichev was founded in 1720, by an edict from the Russian authorities, but Jews lived there much longer. The town was famous because of its great rabbis, Reb Lieber and Reb Levi Yitzhok. The saintly man, Reb Lieber, was the grandfather of my grandfather.

Of Reb Lieber it was told that he was in the habit of leaving his house and wandering off to the forest to meditate. Once, when he stood near a tree, embracing it, not moving, with only his lips whispering something, the Poritz, the landowner to whom Berdichev and all the fields and forests and rivers, and, in fact, the whole district belonged, came upon Reb Lieber and yelled to the Jew:

"Get out of the forest, or I will set my dogs on you!"

But Reb Lieber continued to whisper and to lean his head on the tree. He did not move from his place even when the Poritz set his dogs on him, who jumped on him, and tore his coat, and began gnawing at his flesh.

The Poritz was amazed at the Jew who could stand embracing the tree while the dogs were tearing at his feet. He came down from his horse and stood near Reb Lieber, and asked:

"Didn't you know that I am the owner of the whole district? Why didn't you answer me when I spoke to you the first time?"

Reb Lieber then stepped three steps backwards, and only then replied to the Poritz:

"Yes, I do know you. But I was standing before the King of Kings. Would you speak to some one when you stood before a King?"

The Poritz looked at the gaunt man in wonder and said:

"Forgive me for the discomfort I caused you. Ask anything you want and I will give it to you. I didn't know that such a devout man existed."

Reb Lieber requested only that the Poritz give the town of Berdichev lumber from his forest and permit them to build a shul in the middle of town.

The request was granted, and—the story goes on—the shul still stands there, and the town of Berdichev spread out to the east and to the west, to the north and the south of the shul, and became a city of over forty thousand souls.

This was the ancestor of my grandfather, and now he was asked to travel to a little village of ganovim.

But my grandfather, nevertheless, came to Orinin, and the first thing he specified was that a "klois" be built with a room for him in which to pray and to study, and that in that klois there be no "Ezras Noshim," no section for the women to pray, because women disturbed his concentration.

As long as I can remember Orinin, that klois, the Zinkover klois they called it, had a special room for grandfather, and it had no women's section, unlike all the other houses of worship in town.

I remember my grandfather in his advanced years, when he could not go out of his house. He was sitting in his room, the doors closed, and Seforim, the rabbinical books, were strewn all over the table. None of us could go near the room when he was praying or studying. "Sh, the Zeide is studying," mother warned us. On winter

MOSCOW CELEBRATES SUCCOTH

NEW YORK (JTA): The opening days of Succoth were celebrated in Moscow with songs of celebration, according to information received from the Greater New York Conference on Soviet Jewry. One hundred Soviet Jews observed the start of the Succoth holiday while 150 plainclothes policemen followed them.

nights, a group of admirers would gather in his room, and they would spend the hours studying and telling stories of the "Great Men," the Hasidic Rebbes, of whom wonderful tales were told.

Mother would bring in tea and "farbeisen," little cookies she had baked on Friday, in honor of the Sabbath, and she would put out boiled potatoes in the Hemdlech, in their skins, and the men would eat and drink and sing until late into the night.

Neither Berdichev nor Orinin stand today. The Nazis and their collaborators destroyed them in their sweep through the Ukraine.

When my grandfather died, all the stores in Orinin closed, and the street before the Great Shul was black with mourners who could not get inside the shul. On his grave, after his Matzeva, or monument, was placed, I read his real name:

Reb Yehiel Lieberzon, Sh'ub.

That is the name the descendants of Reb Lieber adopted and carry to this day. Lieberzon, sons of Reb Lieber.

Jewish Restaurant Adds Flavor To Toledo, Spain

To call the Sinai Restaurant management ecumenical in flavor is perhaps an understatement. The chef is a Spanish Catholic who never tasted a drop of chicken soup before she took this job. The chief waiter is a young black man from Lima, Peru, who will soon be ordained as a priest.

And the owner is a French-born Jew and former New York resident who took quite a leap when he jumped from a second-hand clothing store on Canal Street to a Jewish restaurant in Toledo, Spain.

What's more, he opened his restaurant in a city of 40,000, which presently has a Jewish population of exactly zero.

Yet, Albert Elmaleh Chocron — though he's hardly overly modest when he describes himself as "the first Jew in Toledo in five centuries" — sees nothing amiss in all this. Maybe nobody Jewish now lives in Toledo including Albert, who commutes every day from nearby Madrid, but still, he insists, "this is the first Jewish city in all of Spain! The streets, the houses, the shul everything looks just as it did five centuries ago. For the Sephardic Jew, before Israel, Toledo is Jerusalem!"

In fact, the Sinai Restaurant, though its address ironically is "Rayes Catalices 7," sits right in the heart of the old Jewish quarter, just a step away from Sinagoga del Transito, one of the most famous and beautiful Sephardic synagogues in Europe, now designated a national monument by the Spanish Government, and a must for Jewish tourists.

"Every Jewish tourist in Spain comes to Toledo to see the shul," contends Chocron in his typically enthusiastic, sweeping way.

Emotionally, he wanted his restaurant near to it. And it's not bad for business, either; since it's easy for tourists, after they visit Transito, to drop into the Sinai for refreshment.

Indeed, it is so much alive that Chocron is much too busy to talk, as he supervises a huge tray of gefilte fish appetizers being carried into the back room where a large, visiting Hadassah group from Johannesburg, South Africa, are taking their lunch. (The restaurant can seat 250.) In the front, the customers range from a trio of American backpackers with tattered copies of Arthur Frommer's "Europe on 10 Dollars a Day" in sight (yes, the dean of the budget travelers also discovered Sinai) to a table of local priests eating chicken liver with gusto.

"They're my regulars," Chocron says, when he finally has time for a brief sit-down break. "I have about 20 or 25 priests who come in every week. What do they eat? Everything! Matzo ball soup, gefilte fish, but their favorite is chicken liver latkes with apple sauce."

Chocron sits puffing a cigarette, a man of 54 dressed in casual summer shirt, deeply tanned, with dark hair and spectacles and hands always in motion to punctuate his accented English, which by now had picked up traces of varied languages. He was born in France, his father Spanish Moroccan and his mother Russian. The family later moved to the U.S. and in 1950 he went to join them and stayed 17 years in the "junk business" in down town Manhattan.

But a visit to Spain as a tourist in 1967 changed things decisively. He loved the country immediately, so much that he decided to stay, settling in Madrid. Since one of the things that intrigued him most was Spain's Jewish history, he not only joined the Madrid synagogue but got himself involved in the kosher food business, supplying food to airlines. Then came the idea for a restaurant. His first was opened in Madrid — and strictly kosher, too.

"But there weren't enough customers to keep it that way," he says now, almost wistfully. So in 1974 came two big changes.

Instead of "kosher" he changed his restaurant to "Jewish-Style;" and since by now he had become attracted to the history and beauty of Toledo, that's where he opened Sinai, taking into partnership Marie Cruz Dias.

"She knew nothing about Judaism or about Jewish cooking," he says as she, dark-haired and quiet, sits by his side listening (she doesn't speak English). "But she read books, she studied, she learned, and now she knows more than I do!"

He says this with special enthusiasm and pride. Indeed, Chocron has now found himself not only a business but a special mission in Toledo — helping anyone, from his Peruvian waiter to his local customers, to better understand Jews.

"The people of Toledo," he insists, "they like the Jews, they just don't know anything about them. When you say to them, 'I'm Jewish' they look puzzled. 'Why aren't you Catholic?' they ask me. They just don't know anything else."

Now they do, however; at least, a lot more than pre-Albert Chocron. Last spring, the local newspaper devoted a full feature story to the unusual Seder held at the Sinai. To an outsider, it might have looked quite typical — with the matzo, the wine, the rituals and all the prayers — but it happened that this Seder was presided over by a Catholic, and that all 45 people in attendance were Catholics — except one: Albert Chocron, of course.

The following week, he was deluged with phone calls. "Albert, I didn't know you were having a Seder, why didn't you invite me, too?" his Catholic friends asked. And the interest stirred by all this led to another "first," the founding of a new chapter of the Christian-Jewish Friendship Association, a group that already has chapters in Madrid, Barcelona and Seville. Now its newest, and most unique, is Toledo: the only chapter with 40 members and just one Jew.

At the early organizing meetings, trying to balance the roster of officers between Jew and Catholic was a bit of a problem. The presidency was easy: there are two co-presidents, one Jewish and one Catholic, just as it should be. The first is Chocron, the second is Don Antonio Cabrera, a lawyer who is also the notary to the Cardinal, no less.

But after the presidency, the group seemed stymied. "Okay since we need a Jewish vice president, I'll volunteer," offered a priest, who was promptly signed on. "Yes, he's a goy, but he thinks he has Jewish blood in him," smiles Chocron. So, in fact, do a good many Spaniards — Chocron puts the Toledo figure, not verifiable, at a whopping 75 percent of the population.

But whether the officers are quasi-Jewish or genuine, next month the national president of the Friendship Association comes to Toledo to officially inaugurate this fledgling chapter, and already Chocron is full of plans.

One involves Santa Maria de la Blanca, another Toledo treasure, once a synagogue, then a church, now a residence for nuns. "It's very old, and nobody's spending any money to fix it," says Chocron. "But this is a Jewish building, and I want to have it fixed well."

He also talks of a dream to get Jewish services started in Transito, which now is a museum and hardly a living synagogue.

Since it's also a government monument that might not be too easy to accomplish. Besides, I ask with my typically American pragmatism, who would come to Jewish services in a city with no Jews?

That doesn't daunt Albert Chocron at all. He insists the synagogue, if ever opened, would be flooded with guests. "Do you realize what it would be like," he asks, eyes aglow, "if for the first time in five centuries there were actually a Jewish service there?"

RELAXATION ODDITIES-HELPFUL TIPS

By Joy Miller

Oddly enough, even expert skiers are snowplowed when they learn how long skiing has been around. One rock carving of a skier found in northern Norway dates from 2000 B.C.

One way today's skiers control their skis is by edging. That means when you are traversing a hill, both skis are edged equally into the slope. A popular after-game warm-up after a day on the slopes is a Myers's Rum Toddy. In a heatproof glass or mug pour 1 ts. sugar, boiling water and 1½ ounces Myers's rum. Garnish with a slice of lime and a stick of cinnamon.

A good general rule to follow when changing direction in deep snow is to make your turn either at low speed by stemming or at high speed with parallel skis using your impetus as turning power.

US To Boycott Palestine Day

NEW YORK (JTA)—The United States will boycott United Nations ceremonies marking International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People on Nov. 29, it was stated here last week by Andrew Young, the U.S. Ambassador to the UN.

In a letter made public by the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, Young said he had informed UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim that the United States regarded the work of the UN Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People as a "misuse of UN funds." He added: "We will continue to urge other member states to support this position."

Young's statement was issued following a meeting he held with the UN Task Force of the Presidents Conference, in which the Conference called the UN campaign—which includes a pro-PLO film starring Yasir Arafat—"an effort to distort the history of the Middle East, to justify the terrorist slaughter of innocent women and children, and to canonize Arafat as a great hero of national liberation."

Young's statement was released as a letter to Senator Abraham A. Ribicoff (D.Conn.), a member of the U.S. delegation to the current UN General Assembly session. Ribicoff had written to Young urging that the U.S. "not participate" in the Nov. 29 ceremonies, "not send a message to be read at the meeting" and "make clear its strong opposition to this misuse of the United Nations."

TIPS ON LAWN MOWER SAFETY

Are you up-to-date on lawn mower safety? If you're not, you're dangerous to yourself and to others around you. Here are some safety tips from the Outdoor Power Equipment Institute for using a rider power mower.

1. Know what you're doing. Start by reading the instruction manual so all the maneuvers your machine makes come out right the first time.

KEEP ARMS AND feet away from moving parts when starting up the engine.

2. Test the controls—especially the ones that let you stop fast in an emergency.

3. Clear the area of kids and pets—you never know when they can dart in front of you or when objects might be thrown by your machine.

4. Keep your arms and feet away from moving parts when starting up the engine.

5. Make sure the engine has completely stopped before making repairs, refueling or storing. Remove spark plugs for extra safety.

Safety know-how and a little common sense can mean a beautiful lawn and a safe season for you.

Story of 'Yeshive Bocher'

One of the classic novels of American Jewish literature is about to be produced as a Broadway musical. Abraham Cahan's "The Rise of David Levinsky," the story of a "yeshive bocher" from Russia who became a millionaire has been adapted into a musical of the same name with book and lyrics by Isaiah Sheffer and music by Bobby Paul. The musical will be produced by Boston theatre critic (Jewish Advocate and WERB radio) Larry Blumsack.

"During the past three years I was looking for a play or musical that portrayed a significant aspect of the American Jewish experience," said Blumsack. "Marketing research that I conducted during this period indicated that all ethnic groups, not just Jews, were as concerned about their American roots as they were about their old world roots. The immigrant experience that Cahan (founder and editor of the Jewish Daily Forward from 1897 until his death in 1951) has portrayed in his book and that Sheffer and Paul have captured in their musical is a universal story. A story that has never been done on the American musical stage."

"This is precisely what I've been looking for," Blumsack continued, "A show about Jews in a situation that all people could relate to."

According to Blumsack the story depicts the joys and struggles of the immigrants at the turn of the century. Sheffer and Paul's adaptation and music vividly portray the "Americanization" of the immigrant Jews and the phenomenal growth of the garment industry and its labor unions. "It shows the fate of immigrant dreams some achieved, some transformed. Through the show we catch David Levinsky's thirty year development from a pious talmud student in Antomir, Russia — through his greenhorn adventures, his romances, his hopes and his fierce dreams — to theng of Seventh Avenue."

Blumsack first read the script and heard the music last November along with a few hundred other scripts he had solicited or been sent. His wife JoAnn, who is producing the show with him, felt that "The Rise of David Levinsky" deserved special attention. Sheffer's adaptation written in English has been translated into Yiddish for a special production at the Folksbiene Theatre in New York. (One of the few Yiddish theatres left in the country). This production was the most successful one in forty years at the Folksbiene. It received unanimous critical acclaim, including the New York Times and New York Post.

Theatre is a complex art form. No one artist creates the finished product. Before he's through producer Blumsack will have to choose and hire at least fifteen artists before he ever hires one performer. A musical needs a director, choreographer, musical director, orchestrator and arranger, set designer, lighting designer, costume designer plus all their assistants as well as a general manager, accountant and lawyer before the show even gets to the rehearsal stage.

Blumsack is adding another creative person to his staff that one will not normally find with a Broadway show — a director of advertising and promotion. "A Broadway musical is big business," he stated, "I'm dealing with a show that will cost a million dollars to produce and will end up employing about 150 people. With all its professionalism Broadway is barely coming out of the dark ages when it comes to advertising and promotion. I can't take the chance of relying on press agency and critical notices."

Blumsack has a world of experience to bring to his role as Broadway producer. He has twenty-two years in the theatre, film, television and advertising and public relations. He started in the theatre as a lighting, set and costume designer and is still an actor, director, theatre manager, fund raiser, production and communications consultant. Doing many different things simultaneously is a way of life for him but this venture will be different. He has committed himself to concentrating his energies on producing "The Rise of David Levinsky" for the 1979-1980 Broadway season. Blumsack said that the show would play Boston if a theater was available.
