MAYOR URBANO CIOCCETTI'S refusal to approve an official city celebration of the liberation of Rome from Fascist and Nazi rule was drawing criticism and resentment in Italy. Protest meetings were held and complaints were presented to the presidents of the Italian Senate and the Italian Chamber of Deputies by representatives of the Rome Jewish Community, labor unions, Social Democrats, left-wing Socialists, Republican and other parties.

AMERICAN ZIONISTS WERE criticized by Dr. Nahum Goldmann in his address winding up the debate of the Zionist Action Committee meeting in Jerusalem. He said the American Zionist Organization "was not equal to the task" when it came to playing a decisive role in Jewish welfare funds, in the United Jewish Appeal and in the sale of Israel Bonds.

SECRETARY GENERAL DAG Hammarskjold declared last week that he has taken a definite stand on Israel's dispute with the United Arab Republic regarding the halting of ships carrying Israel-originated cargoes through the Suez Canal. "I have much more than considered it," he said at a press conference, "I have taken a stand. But, so far, it is not for publication."

THE ARLINGTON CIRCUIT Court last week threw out a libel suit filed by George Lincoln Rockwell against the Arlington B'nai B'rith. Rockwell distributed anti-Semitic hate literature. After the B'nai B'rith came out with a statement to this effect he filed a $50,000 libel suit, claiming his reputation was damaged by the statement. He was not anti-Semitic but anti-Jewish, he said.

PLANS FOR A NATIONWIDE Junior Bible Quiz for Jewish students of high school age were announced in New York recently by Dr. Samuel M. Blumenfeld, director of the department of education and culture of the Jewish Agency.

THE APPOINTMENT OF ABRAHAM Harman as Israel's Ambassador to the United States was formally announced last week. For a number of years, Mr. Harman was Israel's Consul General in New York. Since quitting that post, he has been in Jerusalem as a leading member of the Jewish Agency executive.

MORE THAN 1,000,000 JEWS have given $1,780,000 to Jewish federations and welfare funds during the 13-year postwar period from 1946 through 1958, it was revealed last week by the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds in a report outlining the broad scope and function of American Jewish philanthropy. The study summarizes major developments in Jewish communal services, analyzes the programs of all major overseas, national and local Jewish agencies, and records the financial resources available for maintaining these programs.

Cash Drive Yields Over $27 Million

NEW YORK—A total of 27,500,000 in cash has been raised as of May 30 in the United Jewish Appeal's national effort to raise 40-million in cash on 1959 UJA pledges, it was announced last week by Melvin Dubinsky, of St. Louis, chairman of the UJA National Cash Committee.

The UJA National Cash Campaign began May 1, Mr. Dubinsky explained, and will continue until the start of the two-day National Cash Conference Saturday, June 20 and Sunday, June 21, at the Hotel Roosevelt in New York City. At that time hundreds of delegates from all parts of the United States will report on the results of the cash drives currently being conducted in their own local communities.

Rabbi Finds Reform Judaism Broader Concept Than Orthodoxy

NEW YORK—The basic philosophical differences between the Reform point of view and that of a more conservative Judaism were set forth in a sermon last week by the Rev. Dr. Julius Mark, senior rabbi of Temple Emanu-El in New York.

Dr. Mark took as the basis for his exposition an article, "Why I Choose to Be a Jew," by Arthur A. Cohen, which appeared in the April issue of Harper's magazine. Taking the four basic points of Mr. Cohen's religious belief, Dr. Mark compared each of them with the Reform position.

Dr. Mark said the four points Mr. Cohen made were:

A belief in the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

The acceptance of the law of Moses as the direct word of God. The belief that Jews are God's chosen instrument.

A rejection of Jesus Christ as the Messiah, coupled with the belief that the Messiah is yet to come.

"As to the first," Dr. Mark said, "the Reform Jews cannot believe in the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. It is not that God has changed, but that man has changed. As our knowledge of man and the universe has grown, so our concept of God has grown."

He said, "Across the centuries, God has now become for us spiritual, universal and eternal."

On the second point, Dr. Mark said: "We would agree that the law of Moses is the word of God in the sense that those mortal men who were responsible for the Torah were God-inspired, but not in the sense that they were literally taking down God's dictation.

"We of the Reform persuasion believe that the law of Moses evolved out of hundreds of writings and re-writings, editings and re-editings, over a period of a thousand years.

"We believe further that there was not just one revelation, or several revelations, but that the history of man reflects the continual revelation of the word of God. Einstein's theory of relativity, for example, is another revelation in a continuous stream of divine inspiration."

In answer to the third point, Dr. Mark said: "Reform Jews cannot believe that the Jewish people are the chosen instrument of God. We cannot subscribe to the idea of such a narrow God that he would single out only one faith. The Jews are not so much the God-chosen—as the God-choosing people. The righteous among other faiths and other people share this burden which we accepted at Mt. Sinai."

On the fourth point he said: "While Reform Jews reject the idea of Jesus Christ as saviour, they have also abandoned the messianic concept of personal redemption from God. We believe rather that every individual by the life he lives, has the messianic spirit within him."

Israeli Desert City Hears Live Concert For First Time

EILAT, Israel—Culture-starved former residents of Budapest, Bucharest and other cosmopolitan cities of Europe; refugees from Arab countries; sailors from Israel's Red Sea fleet; soldiers from the army base; workers from desert copper mines, young men and women from communal settlements, and the elite of Eilat's society—the skilled workers, teachers and officials—were among the 1,500 listeners to the first live symphonic music brought to this bleak, parched outpost on the shore of the Gulf of Aqaba.

Eugene Ormandy, Isaac Stern and the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra were on their first visit to Eilat. This first visit was promoted by Mr. Stern who had visited Eilat in 1949, when there were three huts and some tents making up the entire town. It is now a city of 6,000.

During the final passage of Brahms' First Symphony, an unscheduled crack resounded across the platform. "Someone dropped his false teeth," quipped Isaac Stern. But the truth was more serious; the back of the first cello had cracked from dryness.

This typified the ordeals faced by the artists, who had flown from Tel Aviv to play Beethoven and Brahms in a pocket of a hill, which had been fashioned into a crude amphitheatre.

The wind instrumentalists' mouths were parched and the strings of instruments became taut and snapped. A breeze sweeping down from the Arava depression compelled the musicians to fasten their music to their stands with clothespins. Festoons of bare electric bulbs dancing in the wind provided dreary illumination.

Response Includes "Bomba!"

But the audience on stone benches was attentive and appreciative. They listened hungrily to Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture

Liberal Concept Finds Favor With Young Israelis

JERUSALEM — A liberal concept of Judaism is beginning to cause widening ripples in Israel's sea of orthodoxy according to Irving Spiegel in an article in the New York Times.

Although this new pattern of Judaism is not comparable to the practices of Reform Judaism in the United States, Mr. Spiegel says, it is nevertheless, a sharp cleavage with rigid orthodoxy, the religious force in Israel.

This emerging liberalism is finding strong favor with Israel's younger generation, particularly the Sabras (native-born Israelis) and those who settled in Israel from English speaking countries. It has begun to attract adherents from Israel's non-religious parties.

There are still no synagogues for these liberal worshippers to meet on religious holidays and to hold services for the Sabbath. But they do meet in groups—in homes and in rented halls—for the observance of the holidays.

Two Differing Outlooks

Mr. Spiegel continues: In the United States, the Reform branch emphasizes the evolving character of Judaism and the continuous interpretation of religious law in accordance with the needs of modern Jewish life. Orthodoxy maintains the binding authority of Jewish religious law and insists upon its immutable character.

In Israel, the liberal trend is still steeped in Jewish tradition. However, it is far less rigid than orthodoxy. Men and women sit together at services. This is forbidden by orthodox spiritual leaders. But the men, unlike Reform worshippers in America, wear the Yamulke (the traditional skull cap).

The only organized educational institution in Israel devoted to this liberal practice is the Leo Baeck

Moon Is In the Mood

The romance of the occasion was heightened as a near-full moon rose from behind the rugged peaks of the mountains of Edmon, in Jordan across the gulf.

Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra volunteered their services without charge. The Defense Ministry in Jerusalem and the municipality of Eilat shared the expense of flying the musicians across the Negev.

"This is the greatest cultural event in the history of Eilat," Mayor Hanoeh Nenner said in a speech before the concert.

Ours is a heritage of helping and giving, and in keeping with this heritage the Rhode Island Community is again doing a splendid job. At the same time, costs at the Home continue to rise, and we must as a result ask for an even greater effort on everyone's part.

The Home is a cause which has captured the imagination of people in every walk of life, and as a result, has been the recipient of very favorable attention. Men and women have done unusual work in its behalf, and this is being demonstrated now by all who are participating in the present campaign. We are presently in the midst of a very successful drive for new members, and its success is as a result of tireless work by those who are devoting many hours to the Home.

To all who are making it possible--the new members, the present members, the organizers, captains and workers--yes, to everyone--a sincere "Thank You."

To those who have not as yet become a member, please do so. To the many others who are--a voluntary increase in your membership dues would be of tremendous help and would make our job much easier.

Sincerely yours,

Morton Smith

Liberal Concepts

School in Haifa. It was named in honor of the late Rabbi Baeck, a liberal spiritual leader in the pre-Hitler era in Germany.

The school receives strong financial support from the Reform movement in the United States—the American Board of the World Union for Progressive Judaism, which Rabbi Baeck had headed, the Central Conference of American Rabbis' Committee on Projects for Israel and the National Federation of Temple Youth, the youth arm of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

The founder and principal of the school is Dr. Max Elk, a pupil of Rabbi Baeck. Dr. Elk organized the school in 1939 with sixteen pupils. Today, its elementary school has 860 students and its high school 160.

Youth Held Discouraged

This educator and liberal spiritual leader believes that Orthodox, as taught in the nation's orthodox network of schools, discourages youthful interest.

He maintains that religion must be taught for "its ethical, spiritual and human values." The concept enters into the whole curriculum of the Leo Baeck School.

CASH CAN CHANGE THE PICTURE

...from blighted hopes

...to dreams come true

Pay your pledge—now

Nearly 30,000 immigrants have reached Israel in recent months. A simple, decent house...the chance to work...school for the children. These things make freedom real for newcomers...but only hard cash can supply them.

Some 230,000 earlier immigrants—100,000 of them caught in the despair of the immigrant shanty towns called "ma'abaroth"—still wait to be fully absorbed. Only cash can answer their unmet needs.

Outside Israel, in 25 countries, hundreds of thousands need help. Only cash can rush aid to those who need it.

Do your part—through our community campaign in behalf of the UNITED JEWISH APPEAL.

PLEASE PAY YOUR PLEDGES NOW!

The American Tourist Becomes 'Israelized'

If, however, the American tourist stays longer than a month, if he comes into close association with the people of Israel and lives their life, he gradually ceases to criticize. He gains a deeper and truer insight into the conditions that the people of Israel must face, their economic difficulties, the dangers that surround them on all sides along their exposed border, the extreme problems of adjustment many of them must try to solve. Then he learns to admire their high-hearted courage, their unruffled good humor, their serenity of temper and their undaunted faith in the future. The longer he lives in Israel, the more strongly he becomes attached to the land and the folk. By the time he is ready to leave he has become a "reformed" character; he has become converted to the cause. When he returns to the United States he will be a staunch friend of Israel and a loyal supporter of the Zionist ideal, even though he himself has no intention of ever settling in the so-called homeland. But he will probably return for repeated visits.

What happened to change his attitude? The answer is to be found in Israel's greatest asset — the morale of its people. That is Israel's potent weapon and it is irresistible. The Israelis are past masters of the art of winning friends and influencing people. They woo the American tourist ardently, but they do so spontaneously, and before the tourist realizes what is happening to him they have succeeded in winning him over completely. The Israelis invite him to their homes; he breaks bread with them and enters intimately into their round of social life; he becomes, as it were, a personal and prized friend of the family.

The longer he stays the more the Israelis begin to trust him, and it is not long before he hears the inside story of the frustrations they must suffer. The complaints he voiced earlier are as nothing compared to their own recital of grievances. Politics, favoritism, bureaucracy, extortionate taxation, mismanagement of public affairs, ruinous projects, waste, inept diplomacy, the monopolistic control exercised by the Histadrut — each Israeli has his own tale of woe to communicate.

To his own surprise, however, the American tourist suddenly finds himself put in the strange role of defending Israel, and not without a touch of moral indignation. "What do you people expect, miracles overnight? Please bear in mind that the state has been in existence for only a mere decade. You must expect mistakes in the beginning. Give the people a chance to grow, to learn, and they will overcome all the deficiencies that now seem so inexcusable." And when he speaks they listen — and fall silent, as if ashamed.

For he has wounded them in a vulnerable spot. The Israelis are free to criticize, and they wax heatedly eloquent in their denunciation of the present political regime, but fundamentally they are idealists; there is no question of their loyalty and dedication to the state. Despite everything they find objectionable, they will without warning change their tune and expatiate proudly on the miracle that has been wrought in building up the homeland. Where once stretched only waste tracts of sand flourishing bright cities now stand. Israel has been a sanctuary, a place of refuge, for the exiled Jews of the Diaspora. Israel took them in and accorded them the rights and privileges of citizenship. And consider, the Israelis go on to say, the remarkable feat of the Israeli army during the Sinai campaign, while all the world wondered. All Israel needs is capital and patience and time and more manpower — and it will become not only self-sustaining but impregnable.

Thus the process of what Horace M. Kallen, in his book, "Utopians at Bay," calls "Israelization," applies to American tourists in Israel as well as to the native population. The American Jew has no intention of abandoning his own land, but he will return home (he will always think of America as home) with a more enlightened and enthusiastic report of life in Israel. He will be the best ambassador Israel could possibly have to plead its cause. He will speak with conviction based on fullness of knowledge and understanding, not out of some romanticized version of Zionist idealism.

ONE MAN'S OPINION

Good Bye For The Summer

By BERYL SEGAL

(This is Mr. Segal's last column for the season. His column will appear in the Herald again in the fall.)

These are the days when awards and degrees and honors are being bestowed on people for accomplishments at school, in the professions, and in the arts and sciences.

It occurs to me that an award might be bestowed and honors granted to a community at the end of a busy season. Honors and awards to the people who bestirred themselves on behalf of the welfare of the community, and a citation to the community which responded to the numerous appeals directed toward it in the course of the year.

All honor to those among us who budgeted their time so that amidst work for a livelihood, life with the family, and pursuit of fun and recreation, they could spare hours for the needs of the community, to give meaning to community living.

These are the men and women who planned programs for their organizations, who mapped drives for the needs of our institutions, and who rang doorbells for community causes.

All honors also to a community who supported these programs, responded to the drives, and answered the calls.

Between them the General Jewish Committee met this year's quota to the United Jewish Appeal. Thanks to them the Israel Bond office sold more Bonds than expected. Through them the scores of works of charity, educations, and welfare were assured of the financial means they need.

The job was by no means an easy one. It never is. Probably never will be.

Few are the people who welcome fund raising drives and give to them cheerfully.

Too many are those who refuse to take on community obligations.

Most of us complain about the many drives, and grumble at the sight of another pledge card.

But we grumble and we sign those cards. We complain and we give to all the drives.

And it is these grumblers and complainers who are the supporting pillars of the community structure.

To these we take pleasure in

Our 50th State And Queen Liliuokalani

By HARRY GOLDEN

Despite the excitement and enthusiasm over Hawaii becoming a state, no one in recounting its history has mentioned Queen Liliuokalani, Hawaii's last queen. Queen Liliuokalani was very much a part of Hawaiian history — recent Hawaiian history.

Liliuokalani was a tall, forbidding woman, but every inch a queen. She ascended the Hawaiian throne in 1891, the year her American husband John O. Dominis, the military governor of Oahu, died. She succeeded her brother Kalakaua who was having the country bit by bit removed from his control by the American interests. In order to protect Hawaii against British marauders, Kalakaua had signed some sort of reciprocal treaty with the United States, but when he wanted it renewed, America would renew it only on the condition that it receive exclusive rights to Pearl Harbor.

Liliuokalani saw Hawaii gobbed up by this sort of diplomatic attrition so when she became queen she wrote a new constitution, one section of which read that no foreigner could be considered a citizen and allowed to vote unless he was married to a Hawaiian. A week later the streets of the Hawaiian capital were filled with armed U. S. Marines and the royal palace put under guard. Queen Liliuokalani was informed by courier that a provisional government had taken over because of her unconstitutional acts. This provisional government was headed by Sanford B. Dole, a judge and the son of missionaries.

Liliuokalani tried to bring her side of the story to President Harrison, but Harrison had a treaty of annexation prepared. When a little later, President Grover Cleveland recommended that Hawaiians be given the choice of self-determination, Sanford B. Dole outright refused to turn the country back to Liliuokalani. Instead he imprisoned her, had her court-martialed, forced her to sign a Commie-style confession, and made her abdicate. He did not assign her an American lawyer to present her side before the court-martial, but did let her confer with some Hawaiian flunkies who worked for him.

Hawaii was formally annexed in 1898 during McKinley's term in office, and a few years later Liliuokalani made a trip to Washington, D. C., to retrieve her personal lands that the Americans had seized. These lands were valued then at $6,000,000, and it was land that had been claimed and worked and owned by a long line of Liliuokalani's ancestors. No soap. The government denied her petition, but they did grant her a pension of $175 a month.

It was during this trip that Liliuokalani was evicted from the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York. She transported a carload of pets with her wherever she

Citations of special merit are due this year to the new faces, the younger faces who made their appearance in community affairs this past season.

The Israel Bond drive had its Stanley Grossman, Merrill Hasenfeld and Martin Temkin.

The Hebrew Day school brought out Jerome Feinstein.

Reports Arabs Ready To Settle With Israel

JERUSALEM — Many thousands of Arab refugees in Lebanon and Jordan as well as in Europe, are ready to give up immediately any claims for abandoned property in Israel, if compensated in accordance with its 1948 value, Greek Catholic Archbishop George Hakkim declared here this week.

The Cairo-born Christian dignitary is the spiritual head of the 20,000 Christian Arabs in Israel.

The Archbishop expressed confidence in his evaluation of personal talks with leaders of Christian and Moslem Arab refugees during his recent visit, as well as during previous visits to Arab countries.

He said that at least some of the Arab governments, while they would not say so publicly, would favor receipt of compensation in exchange for giving up claims.

The clergyman stated that many Arab refugees would readily leave the places where they live in Arab countries now, and go to South America, once they received money.

The Archbishop suggested that the Israel Government make an unequivocal announcement, earmaking annually $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 for refugee compensation available among the refugees.

went and the Waldorf couldn't take it.

Liliuokalani died in Honolulu in 1917. She was 80 years old. She died still hoping to regain her throne. She was a cultured woman for all that she was imposing and strong willed and she had many talents, among them a strong predilection for poetry. She wrote hundreds of Hawaiian songs, among them Aloha-oe, the Hawaiian national anthem.

Since I saw her wander down the hill

Through cloud and sunshine to the plain,

Since I met her first beside the rill

All my soul is filled with joy and pain.

Farewell to thee, farewell to thee

Farewell my darling one among the bowers.

A fond embrace, before we now depart

Until we meet again.

Liliuokalani must have indeed loved Hawaii to have written this memorable song.

This Business Of Managers

Haney's Passion

In a recent issue of a monthly sports magazine, there appears a story about Fred Haney, manager of the champion Milwaukee Braves. The article is not complimentary; mostly, it is an examination of the frequent criticism leveled at Haney for his super-cautious tactics in running his club.

It seems that "Bunty", as Haney is caustically known, misses no opportunity to have his hitters bunt a runner along to second base. Even his sluggers are given the bunt sign, and rival catchers are said to haw-haw because the Braves always bunt in the first inning if they get the chance.

Haney does not deny the charges, and the more he is laughed at, the more stubbornly he sticks to his creed. No matter that the opposition always knows what he is going to do, because he so obviously goes by the book. Haney bunts and bunts and bunts, even though he burns at the nickname "Bunty" that has come about because of it.

The mere frequency of his bunting tactics does not explain all the derision that is directed at the Braves' manager. Rather, it is the reason that he gives for pursuing these tactics that gives the scoffers their ammunition.

According to Haney himself, the Braves do not have a good hitting club. The team gets by on its pitching, and because the pitching is so strong, the manager sets his sights on getting three or four runs a game, figuring that this normally will be enough to win. Thus he bunts in the first inning to get a run, and will repeat the tactic in the second, and at every opportunity. So says Haney himself.

This sort of leaves an observer speechless. The Braves do not have a good hitting club? Is the manager kidding? Shouldn't he arrange to be properly introduced to such players as Hank Aaron, and Eddie Mathews, and Bill Bruton, and Del Crandall, et al? (Official National League records show that Milwaukee is far ahead of the other clubs in hitting.)

With a powerhouse of that sort, and the outstanding long ball hitters in its lineup, there is obviously something wrong when that club only can average slightly under five runs per game. You almost have to come to the conclusion that since the Braves are hitting better than any other club, the differential in their run-making ability has to be the needless over-emphasis on sacrificing for one run at a time, instead of letting this bunch of sluggers pound out the runs wholesale by hitting away and playing hit-and-run with more frequency.

Haney's passion for bunting was unknown to this column before it was brought out in the magazine. After all, we New England fans don't have much opportunity to listen to or watch the National League teams in operation.

Nevertheless, I do have a pet peeve against Haney, that has been building up for some time, and is approaching its zenith because of what has happened so far this season. The reason for the peeve is the manner in which Haney is handling his two ace pitchers, Warren Spahn and Lew Burdette.

What's the matter with Spahn and Burdette, you may well ask? Aren't they both winning at a 20-game pace? So what can Haney possibly be doing wrong?

What's wrong is that the Braves' manager has been shamelessly overworking the two hurlers for years. That he is shortening Spahn's baseball life may seem preposterous. Warren is, after all, 38 years old. Not much shortening to be done there.

As for Burdette, wasn't he the first National Leaguer to win nine games this year? If this be overwork, long may it continue! And Lew is 32, old enough to know what he is doing.

Besides, you might add, Spahn and Burdette set a lofty spring goal of 50 wins for 1959 and they are just about on schedule, with 16 wins at the one-third mark.

Nevertheless, the pair are being overworked; they are pitching their arms off, ruining their effectiveness, and quite likely, shortening their career. And their manager is at fault.

Milwaukee has an excellent pitching staff that is at least six starters deep. But all of them, youngsters and veterans alike, take a back seat in Fred Haney's rotation to Spahn and Burdette, who work every fourth day.

In an age when pitchers have to bear down on virtually every pitch, when they have to risk injury to their arms because of the slider, an extra day of rest is considered essential by most pitching coaches. But Spahn and Burdette pitch every fourth day. The others fill in.

Spahn and Burdette won all the Braves' games in the last two World Series against the Yankees. They started 11 of the 14 games, often with only two days of rest.

Because of the superman reputations they built up in those two World Series, Spahn and Burdette have closed their eyes to the hard facts, the cold warnings. Indeed, in his quest for the ever-closer 300 wins, Spahn seems to me to have lost his very sanity.

The sad truth is there in the weekly averages for all to read.

Last Sunday's papers showed Burdette with 116 innings pitched through Friday. (Lew added to that total on Sunday.) This was more innings pitched than any other twirler in the National League.

Second to Burdette's labors were the 112 innings pitched by Warren Spahn. (Warren too added almost nine innings to that total on Saturday.)

What does this herculean work-load reveal in the records? Well, according to the Sunday paper, Burdette, with the most innings pitched, had failed to finish his last five starts. He had yielded 129 hits, more than one per inning — a terrible record. His strikeouts numbered only 35. And his earned run average was a dismal 4.42, 30th best in the league.

Spahn's record was fair, but nothing to write home about. Warren had yielded 114 hits in his 112 innings, although he had 65 strikeouts. (Continued on Page 11)

12% Of Jewish Children Receive Jewish Education

PITTSBURGH — Of the 335,000 Jewish boys and girls of high school age in the United States, only about 42,000 or 12% get some kind of Jewish education, it was reported here recently at the 33rd annual conference of the National Council for Jewish Education. Of those receiving Jewish schooling, half study only one day a week. The remainder attend afternoon Hebrew high schools and all-day schools.

These figures were submitted by Professor David Rudavsky of New York University, and Samuel H. Dinsky, of the Jewish Education Committee of New York. There was a doubling of enrollment in the last 10 years in the Hebrew high schools, they reported.

outs. And his 3.13 ERA was 13th best. He had lost as many games as he had won. Even more revealing is the fact that Spahn was being knocked out of the box pretty regularly. He has not often been able to finish what he started.

My argument is that the elastic in these two great arms is being stretched out of shape. The wear and tear is starting to show. Oh sure, they will pitch brilliantly on occasion, and for short stretches of time. But they are both being sent out to the hill too often, their tired arms are rebelling, and the number of their poor performances is increasing.

For all this, I blame Fred Haney. His is the responsibility to work out a sensible pitching rotation, particularly with the tremendous staff at his disposal. The pitchers may clamor for the work; but it should be the manager, not the aspiring pitcher, who makes the decisions.

On a sensible, every-fifth-day schedule, Warren Spahn would stand a decent chance of winning 300 games. If he continues at his present pace much longer, he will never make it. Even now, it may be too late.

Chalk up another manager whom I do not admire.

ART NOTE: A young painter told Picasso he wasn't making any headway with his paintings and asked: "Do you think I ought to go to school?" . . . "There's nothing a school can teach you," Picasso advised. "Your chance for success won't come from going to school — but from starting a school of your own."

Helen Hayes was persuaded by Mrs. Ben Hecht to become a member of The Troupers, an organization that takes care of the children of needy theater people. Miss Hayes was given an application-questionnaire, and filled it out: Name? Helen Hayes . . . What connection have you with the theater? Actress . . . Where employed? The Helen Hayes Theater.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

ON-THE-CUFF — FOR LUXURIES

An automobile is a necessity in many parts of our nation. But a pleasure boat? A splashy possession, but hardly a necessity.

Chairs, tables, beds are essential furniture in a home. But Hi-Fi? A piano? Lovely possessions, but not essential.

A stove is a basic part of a kitchen. But a luxurious barbecue in the backyard? A nice addition, but not basic.

We, America's consumers, are now taking on extra installment debt at the fastest clip since the record-smashing boom year of 1955 — and by so doing, we're making it even more certain that our nation is solidly into a new cycle of prosperity.

We added $432 million to our installment debts in April alone, the biggest rise in on-the-cuff buying for any month since September of 1955. We pushed the total of our installment debts close to $34.5 billion, a full $1.5 billion over the total a year ago.

But spectacular though the installment buying upsurge is, the really sensational story is hidden beneath the statistics — and is only suggested in the opening lines of this report.

You can, I repeat, argue persuasively that a car is a necessity. And of the total increase in installment buying in April, $220 million went for purchases of cars.

You cannot argue this about boats. Yet, more than 50 per cent of all outboard-powered boats are now being bought on the cuff. The nation's largest independent auto financing company (Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp.) has just expanded its facilities to cover boats, motors, etc. A recent survey of the Southeast revealed two-thirds of the banks in the area are financing purchases of pleasure boats.

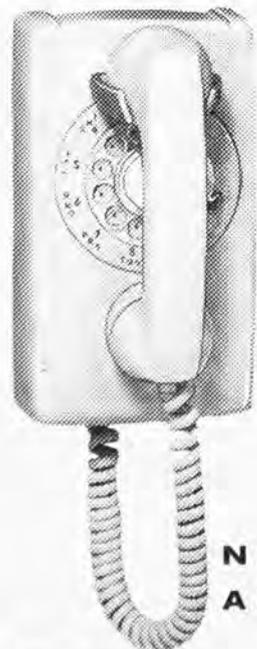

And what is true of boats is true of other items which cannot by any stretch of the imagination be called necessities in 1959.

What is the significance of this? In letters as high as a skyscraper this development is saying that:

Jewish Outposts In Spain

By NAOMI BEN-ASHER

(This is the second of two articles by Mrs. Ben Asher on her visit in Spain.)

To speak of Spanish Jewry is to speak, in effect, of two communities, the small one in Madrid and the "large" one (by comparison only) in Barcelona. There is a scattering of Jews in a few other towns, but these are not easily discovered by a stranger. The prevailing aura compounded of fear, insecurity, and an intense desire for anonymity — the distinctive traits of Jewish life in Spain — is most evident in Madrid. The community here consists of about 130 members and is largely middle class, only two families being indigent and only eight or nine very rich, by local standards. Of the 20 or 30 transients (no one appears to be in possession of exact figures in Spain), most are Moroccan students and their families, who on completion of their studies at the university will leave the country.

Attending a Friday night service in Madrid was a depressing experience. As is required by law, the synagogue is not listed in the directory and its telephone number is under the name of a private individual. The local people presumably know where it is, and tourists can obtain this information from the hotel porters. Stepping out of my cab I was sure that I had been taken to the wrong address. I stood, hesitant in the dusk, before a seedy building in an out-of-the-way neighborhood and searched for an identifying sign. A young man at the top of some steps leading down to a basement doorway stared intently at me for a while and finally said "Shabbat Shalom." I had come to the right address after all.

My greeter, it turned out, was the customary lookout posted to guide the stranger down to the synagogue, which could betray by no outside symbol the existence of a "false" cult. He led me down the dark steps and through an even darker corridor, and soon we entered a badly lit, shabby room containing a few rows of oddly assorted chairs and a Torah Ark.

Directed to the small back room, I found that it served as a congregational catch-all as well as the ezrat nashim (women's section). Female worshippers were apparently not expected to know how to read the service; no prayerbooks were provided for them, not even for the American visitors. When I finally managed to obtain a prayerbook I discovered that it was published in New York and edited by Dr. David de Sola Pool of the Spanish-Portuguese synagogue in that city. The service was Sephardic and orthodox. After services I talked to most of the worshippers, a feat not too difficult since there were only a handful of them. From these conversations and from subsequent interviews I pieced together a picture of Jewish life in Madrid, though rudimentary and constricted.

The 80-year-old retired shamash of the congregation remembered that there were about twenty isolated Jews in Madrid when he arrived there with his father 65 years ago. He recalled the excitement each time they discovered another coreligionist. This elder was the first to tell me it was best not to advertise one's Jewishness in Spain, a bit of advice I was to hear repeated often. One elderly woman turned out, to my surprise, to be the president of the Chebra Kadisha — the burial society. She had come to Madrid in 1914, by which time there were 30 Jews in town, not yet organized into a gemeinde or community. This important event took place in 1917, and the chief organizer and first president was Ignacio Bauer-Landauer, a publisher, journalist and welfare worker.

The years of World War I are remembered as a sort of "golden age" of the Madrid Jewish community. Dr. Max Nordau lived there at the time and furthered Zionist thought and activity in the community. Professor Yahuda was also a participant in community life, and there was a deep sense of pride when Yahuda brought to light some ancient Jewish grave-stones in the Toledo cemetery. After the war, as the population increased, the activities and organizations also multiplied. Between 1925 and 1936 there was a literary circle of 45 women who participated in Jewish National Fund work and helped newcomers and the early refugees from Germany to get settled and to find jobs.

The bitter civil war in Spain disrupted Jewish life severely. Many people left Madrid, and only twelve Jewish families remained in the city throughout that unhappy period. The synagogue, then in a two-room walk-up loft, was bombed out. The Hebrew school fell apart and has as yet not been reconstituted. It is estimated that there are only about a dozen Jewish children ten years of age or under in Madrid. They usually attend the French school, a private institution that does not compel its pupils to participate in religious instruction as is required in the public schools. (Even in the university, students cannot obtain exemption from the catechism examinations.) A circumcision or a bar mitzva occurs about once in a decade and the whole community turns out for the celebration.

Otherwise, social life is hindered by typically Spanish status considerations; organization activities are limited by the unattractiveness of the synagogue, the only communal center in town. The WIZO (Women's International Zionist Organization) president bemoans that, because of the latter factor, most of its original 36 members do not show up for the rare meetings. Yet interest and pride in the State of Israel is the rule and finds expression within the community's work and budget. Even many of those who, fearing for their safety after the demise of the republic had sought shelter in conversion, continue to contribute to the community funds.

Kim Hunter will have a major role with Julie Harris in the Broadway play, "The Warm Peninsula" . . . Sen. Javits' theme in his address to the Horace Mann graduates last week, was "Go World, Young Man, Go World" . . . "Lolita," which was first published in Paris in English, at last has been approved for sale in a French translation. The ban was lifted when the script was altered. In the French version the girl isn't 12, but 14.

Charles Coburn tells of the Hoyle Club in Hollywood, the weekly poker-game he founded there with Ira Gershwin, Jerome Kern, Marc Connelly and others. From each big pot they'd kitty-out, to sponsor a needy, deserving artist. One beneficiary, a German refugee writer, confided his problem — he was in love. Coburn advised him: "Bring her to the game. We can't promise anything, but . . ." The writer brought the lady. The players liked her, and doubled the writer's allowance.

Harold Arlen and Johnny Mercer will move back to New York this summer for the casting of their new musical, "Saratoga." Rock Hudson finally decided against making his Broadway debut in this show . . . A garment manufacturer at 1 Fifth Av. said he invested in "J.B.," the Pulitzer Prize play, "because I've always wanted a monogrammed show" . . . Simon W. Gerson, the Daily Worker and Communist Party official, has become executive vice president of a public relations firm.

Paulette Goddard, wearing part of her fabulous jewelry collection, was at the Roundtable with her husband, Erich Maria Remarque, and some friends. They spoke of summer travel plans, and Miss Goddard mentioned that she'd been to all those places. "I guess," said one of her friends, "the only thing left for you is a missile trip to the moon" . . . "Eventually," replied Miss Goddard, "but not until those monkeys come back wearing diamond bracelets."

Laurence Harvey will star in a TV show this month, under Alfred Hitchcock's personal direction . . . Harvey also will co-star with Audrey Hepburn in Hitchcock's film, "No Bail for the Judge" . . . United Talent, the model agency, obtained the secret list of Harry Conover's models and is trying to sign them . . . Marlon Brando is using a silent-screen method for the death scene in "One-Eyed Jack": A phonograph plays Belafonte's "Shenandoah," to create the mood.

Attempts to stabilize the Madrid congregation by obtaining official sanction for it, as in Barcelona, have met with no success. There was simply no reply from the authorities, neither negative nor positive. Yet on holiday celebrations and at all community functions, a police official in mufti and a yarmelke attends unobtrusively. He says nothing, smiles ingratiatingly and does not interfere, but his presence is felt; his function is to see that nothing subversive occurs. While circumcision and shechita are permitted, marriage formalities are very difficult to conclude since Jewish religious ceremonials have no legal status. The Spanish-born daughter of one couple that had been settled in the country for 33 years had to obtain proof of her citizenship plus a letter from the bishop before her marriage ceremony could be performed. It was the second civil marriage on record in Madrid.

The current president of the community, Senor Luis A. Blitz, settled in Madrid in 1931. Having fled Germany in time and having prospered in Spain, he retains a sense of gratitude to his adopted community. Senor Blitz is evidently adept at a form of community leadership known in Jewish history as shtadlanut. He uses quiet diplomacy to secure some official recognition for the Madrid Jewish community. Despite the fact that public religious services for non-Catholic bodies are illegal, he has yet managed to institute a public community Seder. Ostensibly it is a function for American Jewish soldiers stationed nearby. The invitations for the Seder are issued by the American Ambassador on official stationery, the community by implication being merely the caterers for the function. Since there is no rabbi in the community, Senor Blitz himself carries many of the responsibilities.

Recently the Madrid Jewish community received a grant from the Claims Conference to build a "Center for Jewish Cultural Activities." Once this structure is erected and religious services as well as organizational and social activities are removed from their depressing basement surroundings, the community hopes to provide for the Jewish education of the children and for adult cultural projects.

Throughout my various interviews and discussions one piece of information was constantly volunteered without questions or prompting on my part: there was no anti-Semitism in Spain and Hispano-Jewish relations were good. The single departure from this wholesale generality came from an analytical teacher at the French school. The upper classes and intellectuals are tolerant of Jews, she told me, and relations between them are as natural as class distinctions permit. The middle and lower classes, however, are intolerant and attempt to baptize everyone. This, she concluded, is not so much anti-Semitism as narrow sectarianism.

Barcelona

It is doubtful that many of Barcelona's 900 Jews are aware that their current prosperity is in keeping with past Jewish history in that city; in the 11th and 12th centuries, almost a third of the real estate of the Barcelona province was owned by the Jews of this maritime and commercial center. While the relative percentage of their present number in the city's total population of one and a half million is negligible, their strength has yet sufficed to create a community far more cohesive than that of Madrid. Their cultural and religious activities may not, in the nature of things, bear comparison with the past; the Barcelona Jewish community in the 13th century led by Rabbi Solomon ibn Adret was known as the spiritual capital of Spanish Jewry.

(1) We, America's middle-income families, are upgrading the quality and variety of our buying to levels beyond any precedent ever.
(2) We do not recognize any limits to our wants for goods, and the more we have and the more that is invented for us, the more we want.
(3) We pull back on instalment buying only when we become frightened about our jobs and insecure; we expand our borrowing when we regain confidence and our incomes rise.

(4) We are adding new dimensions to the income revolution of our generation — dimensions which weren't even dreamed of a few years back.

Perhaps because these sentences are simple you think the points are obvious. But oh no! What I'm trying to put into words is a story that never has been written about any great mass of people before, because it never has been true about any great mass of people before.

Even in our own country a decade ago the vast majority had only enough income to buy necessities, and only enough credit to buy better necessities now and then. Only 9 per cent of all America's families had incomes between $6,000 and $8,000. Only 3 per cent had incomes between $8,000 and $10,000.

Today, though, the $6,000-$8,000 class covers 17 per cent of us. The $8,000-$10,000 group covers 9 per cent of us.

The millions of us in these income categories have a choice about how we spend an impressive chunk of our incomes. We have no inhibitions about borrowing to add to our luxuries.

We have no hesitation about splurging borrowed money for luxuries. We view the luxury market as OUR market, a mass market.

This trend will intensify and spread. Our whole country will be trading up in the years ahead. What we're seeing is just a starter.
