Tidbits and News of
Jewish Personalities
By DAVID SCHWARTZ

Milwaukee

Jewry

Parodying Shakespeare one might say there are columns in stones and running brooks—and even in running trains. This is being written in between train stops in the city of Milwaukee, far from the maddening Broadway.

Milwaukee, Nathan Gould, editor of the Milwaukee Jewish Chronicle, boasted to me, feels itself particularly fortunate in the seeming almost total absence of anti-Semitism.

As regards the current business slump, a less enthusiastic note was struck. Yet, in Milwaukee, there came to me a story, apropos of the business slump, which ought to cheer the spirit.

Table

Diplomacy

A wealthy Jew, followed the good old Sabbath tradition of having an "orach" (a guest) for the Shabbath meal. All of the food was placed on a large platter, with the larger quantity facing the host, while the slimmer portions were on the side which faced the "orach."

How to get the better side to himself was the problem of the orach.

Very adroitly he began to tell a tale "I want you to understand, Mr. Host," he began, "that I, too, was once very rich, but all of a sudden, things gave a turn—and I became a poor man." And as he said the words, "gave a turn," he illustrated it by spinning the platter around so that the better part was in front of him.

The rich man saw what happened. "That's all right, Mr. Orach," he said. "I understand how that is—in fact, just the reverse of that happened to me. You see, once I was very poor, and then suddenly, things gave a turn, and I became rich." As he said, "gave a turn," the rich man also illustrated by spinning around the platter to its original position.

And so, the poor man was out of luck again. But the moral of the story, I suppose, is that "things may suddenly give a turn," and let us hope for the better.

Jews and the

Chicago Fair

Chicago is planning, as you know, a world exposition in 1933. And there is going to be a decided Jewish angle to it, according to H. L. Meites, the editor of the Chicago Jewish Chronicle. Meites has written a book for the occasion—a voluminous history of the Jewish population of Chicago.

One of the most interesting tales of the book is the story of a Jewess, to whom Meites credits much of the early growth of the pineapple city.

History of

Chicago Jews

This woman was a Mrs. Kohn, who came to Chicago from Bavaria, somewhere in the decade of 1830. When she arrived, there was no shochet in Chicago, so her son harnessed his horse and set off for the east and brought back a shochet.

Then the High Holy Days came around, and there was no synagogue in town. The pious woman sobbed. "But we only have eight Jews in town. How can we have a synagogue?" asked the son. "We have no minyan."

As you might guess, he harnessed his horse again and was off to the east, picking up two peddlers and brought them to Chicago and established a synagogue.

It was this nucleus of small Jewish business men who gave much of the first decided commercial impulse to Chicago, writes Meites in his history.

This synagogue, by the way, stood at the site of the present post office in Chicago. There is a tablet on the post office which reads to the effect:

L. LIPSKY DEMANDS PRESENT LEADERS, Z. O. A., BE REPLACED

Insists Brandeis-Mack Group be Ousted; Scores Wise's Speech at Zionist Congress

New York, Aug. 21—(JTA)—The present administration of the Zionist Organization of America, dominated by the so-called Brandeis-Mack group, must be swept out of office at the next annual Zionist convention, and a representative administration elected in its stead, was the declaration made last Thursday night by Louis Lipsky, former President of the Zionist Organization of America, at a reception tendered to him on his arrival from Europe, where he had been attending the World Zionist Congress as a member of the American delegation, according to an official release issued by the New York Zionist Region.

Mr. Lipsky's speech was regarded as the beginning of an effort to oust from office the present official leaders who came into power in June, 1930.

Referring to the speech made at the Zionist Congress by Dr. Stephen S. Wise, who attacked Dr. Chaim Weizmann, Mr. Lipsky characterized Rabbi Wise's address as "vulgar and utterly irresponsible."

During his address, Mr. Lipsky said in part:

"The World Zionist Congress last month witnessed an extraordinary display of partisan prejudice and personal animosity on the part of the majority of the American delegation which, throughout the sessions of the Congress and in the midst of all discussion of the fundamental and critical issues affecting the Zionist movement at this time, was animated primarily by the desire to eliminate Dr. Chaim Weizmann as the World Zionist President.

"The economic program adopted at the Congress was entirely different from that which had been spoken of in this country last June. It had been intended then to elect a committee of economic experts who, as part of the World Zionist mechanism, would facilitate the influx of capital into Palestine. All that did happen was that the Congress gave its pious approval of the entry of private capital into Palestine, an approval which it has very consistently given always. But no experts were placed in charge of the work and the Zionist movement as such did not align itself with the stimulation of private initiative through organized effort. That is now, as it has been during the past ten years, the province of individuals.

"But the majority of the American delegation was entirely content that its program, so exultantly heralded before the Congress convened, should be scrapped at Basle, as soon as it was assured that its principal aim, the unseating of Dr. Weizmann, was accomplished."

WARBURG DECLARES PALESTINE SUPPORT NEEDED MORE NOW

Says Jewish Homeland Is Going Through Trying Period of "Stress and Trial"

New York, Aug. 21—(JTA)—Because Palestine is going through "a period of stress and trial," it is more necessary than ever for Jews of all sections and viewpoints to give "devoted support" to the upbuilding of the Jewish Homeland in Palestine, says Felix M. Warburg, in his written introduction to the annual report of the Palestine Foundation Fund (Keren Hayesod). The report has just been made public by the American Palestine Campaign, the fundraising instrument in the United States for the Keren Hayesod.

Declaring that the rebuilding of Palestine is knitting closer all sections of the Jewish people, Mr. Warburg asserts that in regard to the Keren Hayesod "there can be no question, no difference of viewpoint."

RABBI MAZURE IS ELECTED TO BETH-ISRAEL PULPIT

Well-Known Hebrew Scholar and Orator to Succeed Rabbi Jacob Sonderling

Out of a large number of applicants for the pulpit of Temple Beth-Israel, Rabbi Maurice M. Mazure was unanimously chosen last week to become its spiritual head, to succeed Rabbi Jacob S. Sonderling.

Rabbi Mazure comes from a distinguished family of Rabbis of several generations back. He is a well-known Hebrew scholar and a very forceful orator. Besides his Rabbinical degrees, he also holds the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and has occupied prominent pulpits in Sioux City, Iowa, Pittsburgh, Pa., Stamford, Conn., and Worcester, Mass.

While in Sioux City, Rabbi Mazure founded the Jewish Educational Alliance there, and was its first president. He also established a free dental clinic for the poor. In the communities where he served, he was always active in charitable affairs, whether Jewish or non-Jewish.

During the World War, Rabbi Mazure took a very active part in patriotic work. He was singularly honored by the Mayor of Pittsburgh to represent the Jews of that city during the war exhibition.

Rabbi Mazure has always been held in very high esteem by the clergy of other denominations.

The Sioux City press, in an editorial, entitled "A Civic Loss," contains the following comment on Rabbi Mazure's activities there:

"After four years' service as Rabbi at Mt. Sinai Temple, M. M. Mazure leaves today to take up work in a broader field. Quiet, unassuming, but thoroughly democratic, Mr. Mazure has been a most efficient man in his own church and religious circles here and also a wholesome factor in civic affairs generally. Membership in the Temple has doubled and the Sunday School, of which he has served as Superintendent, has tripled in the four years of his Rabbinate. In the wider humanitarian field his

MAY START SOON ON MAIN BUILDING OF HEBREW UNIVERSITY

Jerusalem, Aug. 21—(JTA)—The return of Dr. Judah L. Magnes, Chancellor of the Hebrew University, recently raised hopes for the immediate beginning of construction work on the central building of the Hebrew University, which is to house the Institute of Jewish Studies and an auditorium. The structure is to be built from the $500,000 gift of Mrs. Sol Rosenbloom of Pittsburgh.

The plans for the buildings have been designed by J. Clarence Levi, New York architect, who made a special trip to Palestine for that purpose.

The Story of a Libel

A Chapter in American-Jewish History

By JOSHUA BENDON

This article, written expressly for the Jewish Telegraphic Agency and The Jewish Herald, recreates a scene of close to a quarter of a century ago when an American public official insulted the Jews who rose in protest against his charges—Editor's Notes.

In a recently published article by Ernest K. Coulter of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, the author tells of the amazing decrease in Jewish criminality that has taken place in New York ever since, some twenty-five years ago, when a bold announcement by the Police Commissioner galvanized the Jews into corrective action.

If the change Mr. Coulter described is in truth astonishing, so, too, was the bombshell amidst the Jews, to which the author traces the origin of the change. Scanning the contemporary records of the episode there stands revealed one of the most exciting Jewish events in the story of the greatest metropolis of the United States. It is a story, too, that throws much light on methods and manners and attitudes and alignments of today.

The New York of 1908, the exact year of the occurrence, was vastly different from the city of some quarter of a century earlier. Within that period there had come to the hospitable shores of the United States millions of immigrants. Among them there were mounting hundreds of thousands of Jews. They effected a change in tempo in the city that was of considerable importance to the community's progress. But the new immigrants also brought new faces, new languages, new habits. New York acquired a different color and dash of life than it had known earlier. There were not a few snobs of the older inhabitants who figuratively tilted their noses towards the newcomers and actually snubbed them as inferiors.

This conditioning of New York undoubtedly affected developments, especially the developments of this story. Other than snobbery there appeared also the growing influence and political power of the Jews. From their mingling this picture of a near quarter of a century ago emerges.

The excitement began late in August, 1908, when Police Commissioner Theodore A. Bingham, in an article published in the North American Review on Foreign Criminals in New York, included the statement that "it is not astonishing that with a million Hebrews, mainly Russian in the city, one quarter of the population, perhaps, half the criminals, should be of that race."

There was more in the article that revealed the anti-Semitic mind. There was reference to a "natural bent" of the Jew for a special type of criminality. And other sentences of like import.

Promptly the article stirred up a hornet's nest.

JEWS RANK FOURTH IN RELIGIOUS FAITH AT OHIO STATE U.

More Than Fifty Denominations Included in Survey Recently Held

Columbus, O., Aug. 21—(JTA)—A survey just completed by officials of the Ohio State University located in Columbus reveals the fact that Jews rank fourth in the religious affiliations of its students, which number 15,126.

More than fifty denominations were included in the survey, the largest group being the Methodist Episcopal with 4511 students, naming it as their church. The next group was the Presbyterian, with 2065, followed by Catholics with 1149 and Jews 1093.

Seven per cent. of students failed to indicate any affiliations. The percentage of Jews at the university is more than double the percentage of Jews in the population of Ohio, which amounts to approximately three per cent.

Several of the English newspapers featured the story with sensational headlines. They were followed promptly by similar newspaper excitement from the Yiddish dailies.

The staid Tageblatt (of pious memory) interrupted its routine pages by running a large double column banner headed, "Bingham's Ugly Insult to the Jews." On other days there followed more two column stories and editorials reporting the excitement of New York's Jewish spokesmen and calling upon the commissioner to resign his office. Later Louis Marshall was constrained to write to the Tageblatt differing with its heated calls for public alarms.

—There was thunder and lightning in the city.

The commissioner's figures were challenged by well-known statisticians. On top of that resolution individuals came forward with denunciations and, of course, the newspapers did not deny place to the sensation.

The Forward, at that time boasting a circulation of over 72,000 readers, rested long enough from its reports of the impending Socialist Revolution and the summary of Comrade Upton Sinclair's latest expose, to throw itself wholeheartedly into the fray. Its special contribution was the information that jailed strikers were listed among the Jewish criminals reported upon in the commissioner's article. The Forward further fanned the excitement with the headline, "Bingham Against Russian Jews."

But it must not be supposed that if the insult was directed solely against the Russian Jews that they alone arose in protest.

The American Hebrew, spokesman for the German Americans, with Cyrus L. Sulzberger at the time as its head, called Bingham's article an "over-colored account" and said of it: "Many of Commissioner Bingham's statements are obviously due to prejudice rather than to experience; and the general tone which he has chosen to adopt toward Jewish criminality deserves reprobation."

Later the publication refers, with typical calm, "to the commotion raised among the Jews of the city," adds that it is quite unnecessary and continues: "Commissioner Bingham is not renowned for the accuracy of his statements or the objectivity of his judgments. The American Jews regard such obvious slander with the silence, and contempt that it deserves."

Jacob H. Schiff expressed himself as shocked and astounded by the statements which he described as "of an anti-Semitic intent." Louis Marshall rose in protest. So did Rabbi Judah L. Magnes of Temple Emanu-El. So, too, did Rabbi Joseph Silverman, Judge Rosalsky, Congressman Goldfogle and many another spokesmen of Jewish organizations, many of whom met to protest against the commissioner.

Non-Jews, too, joined in the outcry. A German newspaper protested; Arthur Brisbane called for the commissioner's resignation. Congressman Bennet, Judge Crain, Magistrate Walsh and that famed defender of the Jews, Madison C. Peters, all raised the hue and cry. The last named wrote to the New York American that Bingham was not suited for his office.

Columnists and cartoonists took up the issue. Bernard G. Richards, present secretary of the American Jewish Congress at that time, wrote a series of Discourses of Kardansky, a sort of Jewish Mr. Dooley. On that occasion he made his character cautious: "Hush, there is a cop around. Do not say a word or you will add to the percentage of Jewish criminality. . . . I know a man who was arrested because somebody stole his watch. . . . if you don't know the language well enough to say that you're innocent, you're a criminal."

The excitement died down after Bingham apologized and threw the blame for his figures on a subordinate. "Hence," he said, "it becomes my duty manfully to repudiate them."

Thus the Jews in New York waged one of their first fights to establish their good name and repute in the public opinion.

In a Jewish Town

By ELIAS TOBENKIN

Elias Tobenkin, the Jewish Telegraphic Agency's Moscow correspondent, has written another moving description of Jewish life in Russia especially for the Jewish Telegraphic Agency and The Jewish Herald—Editor's Note.

I stopped over in a White Russian town, asked the first Jew I met for Mr. Aaron Wernik, which is not the man's real name, to whom I had regards from a brother in New York. The prefix "Mr." was a slip of the tongue, but it acted like a strange magic. It electrified the Jew before me. In ten minutes every inhabitant, male and female, Jew, Christian, Tartar, knew that an American had come to town, that he had asked for Aaron, the hardware man, that he was staying at Solovitchik's; Solovitchik's being the town's inn.

I found Mr. Wernik's house and was told by Mrs. Wernik that her husband was in the next street, where he was working in the "Univermag," "Univermag" being the Russian equivalent for the word department store. A question elicited the information that her husband was the manager of the department store, which was government owned. Mrs. Wernik offered to call her husband, but I preferred to go over to the Univermag myself.

I found Mr. Wernik behind a counter supervising a sale. He was a Jew in the fifties, with untrimmed beard. His sidelocks made a concession to the new regime; they were not as long as they had been when he was thirty-five, but he had not dispensed with them entirely. He was speaking to a peasant woman with authority. She made the purchase and Mr. Wernik and myself were left alone for a chat.

I asked him how he, an Orthodox Jew, belonging to the old generation, came to be the manager of the town's only department store, which was a Soviet institution. I set down his story, minus the numerous repetitions, reminiscent little sighs and an occasional sly wink at the expense of the local authorities and "their business ability."

"When they took my store from me, nearly ten years ago, and nationalized it," Mr. Wernik began, "I wrote to my brother in New York. We decided that I had better emigrate to Palestine. He promised to help me with a visa. At first I thought it would be a matter of weeks and I did nothing. Finally I realized that getting permission to leave Russia may be an even longer process than obtaining a visa from the British or Palestinian government to get into that country, and I looked around for something to do.

"I took whatever work came my way. Since it was temporary only it did not matter what one did. A year passed and then another. My brother was using all the influence he could to get me a visa; I was finding out all I could about the possibility of getting out of the Soviet Union.

"Finally the visa came. I applied for a passport and was promised it.

Then one night a committee came to me from the Town Soviet. They had a proposition to make: Would I go back to my store, not to own it, but to run it for the town? I was an experienced hardware man; the man who was running it now was a total stranger to the business. The peasants were dissatisfied. It was their suggestion that I take over the store and run it for them.

"My visa could be used within a year. I agreed to take the job for six months. When I entered the store the next day, there were two dozen customers there, waiting; they had heard of my coming back. The reception they gave me was unforgettable. The young men shook my hand warmly, as if I were doing them a personal favor by coming back to look after their needs. The old men patted me on the shoulder and kept repeating: 'Now things will be well again; Aaron is back.' All of us sat down about a table and together we made out an order for the things the store needed. They left for home in a holiday spirit.

"When the six months were up, the Town Soviet raised my salary fifty per cent and when the year was up and I was to make a decision whether to go to Palestine or stay at home, the Soviet made another little concession to me. For my services to the community my children would be given the status of proletarians. They would have an opportunity to study at Soviet schools, to develop whatever abilities they had. I was given a sort of a patent of 'proletarian nobility.' I talked the matter over with my wife. 'Distant fields always look more green than those near,' she remarked thoughtfully. 'It is a sin to throw away bread.' And so I became a hardware man once more, a Soviet business man.

"Last year the collectivization of farming began and the hardware business was put on a new basis. Machines came in great numbers. A younger man with a knowledge of mechanics was called for. Such a man was ordered; he was to come within a week. A shadow fell upon our home once more. My children, it is true, were already earning money, but what man of fifty-five wants to depend upon children.

"My wife and I talked matters over once again, as we always did in every crisis. 'Don't cross bridges until you come to them,' she counseled. And it was good counsel. A few days before the new man, who was to replace me, came, I was called to the Soviet. I was introduced to a visitor from the capitol of our republic, Minsk. He was in charge of all government stores.

"He shook hands with me. His gaze seemed to penetrate into my soul. He was evidently accustomed to size men up with a look, to make decisions quickly. By the way, he was a Jew and despite his excellent Russian, I could detect a Talmudic sing-song in his voice.

"Towarisch Wernik," he addressed me, 'we don't need you any more in the hardware store; the job is becoming too technical. What would you say to our putting you in charge of the Univermag? It needs pulling up badly.'

"I have never dealt in anything but hardware,' I hesitated.

"The visitor glanced at a paper before him—my record—and turned to me with a smile: 'In our Soviet land a youngster of 55 with such an excellent head as yours ought to be able to learn any new line of business in a week or two. I'll allow you a month to reorganize the store and put it on the same standard that you would have if you owned it.'

"Well, now that you know all about my life," concluded Aaron Wernik, "please, tell me about my brother in New York."

"How does a Jew live?" Nachman Wolf, ex-butcher, seventy years old, paraphrased my question and gave his broad white beard a shake not unlike that which a virtuoso might give his head of long black hair. When they—the older generation frequently speaks of the new government as 'they'—when they took the meat shop from me and turned it over to the community, and then the government bank in Minsk, where I kept my savings for old age was nationalized, I thought that the world had come to an end. In order to live we began selling our household goods. I had no one in America and could not call for help from that source. My two sons were married and had children of their own; they also had been left jobless by the new order of things. My younger daughter was married less than a year. Her husband was in the same plight. They had taken away our houses and all of us moved into a single peasant hut.

"A meat co-operative was organized in town. I applied for work but was refused. My sons applied; they too, were refused. It was a political matter; they wanted 'their' people everywhere and there was nothing to be done about it.

"One evening when we were finishing our meager supper, my son-in-law, who was only twenty-five, lifted up his face from the newspaper announced: 'I am going to Nizhni. I see in the paper that there is work to be had there—common labor, free for all.' My daughter uttered a suppressed shriek; she was to become a mother in two months. A silence fell upon the room. My oldest son spoke up. 'I am going with you he said to my son-in-law. My second also spoke up; he, too, was going to Nizhni to take common labor.'

"Nine years passed since that evening," Nachman resumed after a pause. "All my children are now settled in what was once called 'Great Russia' and where Jews were forbidden to live. They have repeatedly pleaded with my old woman and myself to come and live with them. But we cannot make up our minds to break away from this place. It has been the home of our ancestors for many generations. Even the cemetery seems a part of us, related to us.

Again there was a pause, in which Nachman Wolf stroked his beard thoughtfully. Then he spoke in a more cheerful voice:

"The town calls me 'the pensioner' because our children send us our allowance on the first of each month as regularly as if it were a government pension. They are good Jewish children, thank God."

Baer Samsonov's chief preoccupation is his beard. Some one had once remarked that Baer resembles Kalinin, the peasant president of the Soviet Union. Since then Baer has been trying to make his beard look as much like Kalinin's beard as possible. He has succeeded in part. He looks different from the average run of Jews in his native town, more Russified, more Sovietized.

In his youth Baer, who is a leather worker, had once undertaken a journey to Warsaw to get work there. There was a political demonstration in town and he was arrested along with hundreds of others. He was kept in prison for a few days, but was released for lack of evidence. Nevertheless this gave him a revolutionary background and he always looked upon himself as a part of "the movement." When the revolution came he was the first in his town to side with the Bolsheviks. He did it blindly, but it proved a good move.

When the Bolsheviks remained in power he was considered a veteran supporter of the regime. His children were given a chance. They were sent to Soviet schools; they were given jobs. On two or three occasions the pictures of Baer Samsonov's sons appeared in the Soviet papers. All of them live in Moscow now.

Repeatedly Baer's children had suggested that their parents join them in the capital. Mrs. Samsonov would gladly be near her children, but Baer declines. Once a year he and his wife go for a visit to their sons and when they come back, Baer is the sensation of the town.

The last time Baer came from Moscow it was rumored that his son had introduced him to Stalin.

Someone asked Baer whether this was true. He denied it. But his denial was so important and mysterious that the town is convinced it was true, that Baer Samsonov had met Stalin, but that it is best politically not to speak of it.

"Baer Samsonov certainly has a fine old age," people in town say of him.

And so he has.

Catholic-Jewish Teachers Find It Hard Getting Jobs

New York, Aug. 21—(JTA) — Following closely upon the recent investigation that revealed a colossal amount of ignorance and of prejudice against the "other fellows" religion among young school children of New York City, there has come another survey revealing a widely existing prejudice against the employment of school teachers on grounds of race and religion. The results of the survey were announced by Clyde R. Miller, director of the Bureau of Educational Service, Teachers' College, Columbia University.

According to Mr. Miller's findings, competent and qualified teachers fail to obtain positions because they are Jews or Catholics or Unitarians or because they do not happen to be of the Nordic race.

"It is exceedingly difficult," Mr. Miller declared, "for many Jewish teachers to get positions. Catholics also find difficulty to get positions in various sections of the country. Of course in most places it is next to impossible for people not of the white race to obtain positions. Very often, when our bureau receives a call to fill an opening in some school or college, the religion desired is very definitely designated."

NAZI EDITOR IS JAILED FOR LIBELING FORMER MINISTER

Berlin, Aug. 21—(JTA)—M. Pfafferot, editor of the Hitlerite paper, "Rote Erde," was sentenced to 6 weeks imprisonment recently for libeling Rudolph Hilferding, the former Socialist Minister of Finance.

In a recent issue, "Rote Erde" had alleged that the "Oriental Jewish" Minister of Finance, Hilferding, had cancelled a 30,000,000 marks tax indebtedness of a leading Jewish tobacco firm Reemtsma as a result of which he was elected to the company's governing board at an annual salary of 120,000 marks.

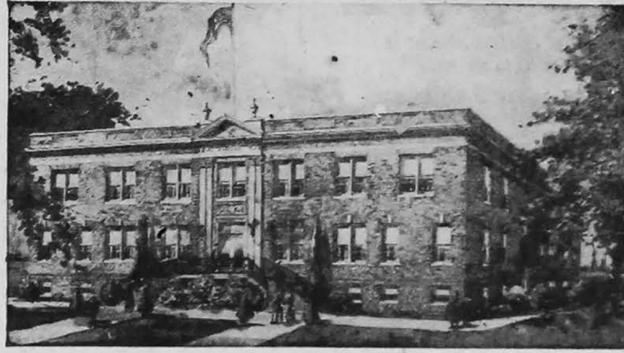

The court that sentenced Pfafferot established that Herr Hilferding had never had a place on the governing board of the Reemtsma concern.

FIRST JEWISH ARTISANS LEAVE FOR BIRA BIDJAN

Kovno, Aug. 21—(JTA)—The first group of Jewish artisans recruited in Lithuania by N. Rachkes in behalf of the Soviet Ort (Society for Promotion of Agriculture Among Jews), proceeded recently to Bureya, Siberia.

The Lithuanian government permitted the artisans to leave the country on the condition that they surrender their citizenship. Bureya or Bira Bidjan, is in the Far Eastern Republic, where the Soviet government planned to establish a Jewish republic.

Dedicate B'nai B'rith Home for Aged

The new B'nai B'rith Home for Aged and Infirm at Yonkers, N. Y., was dedicated recently with fitting ceremonies attended by officials of B'nai B'rith District, No. 1, which has maintained the Yonkers Home since its founding in 1881.

The original building was demolished in 1928 to make way for the above building. This new structure is located on a hill overlooking the Hudson river. It is of red brick colonial architecture, modern and fire-proof, and incorporates every convenience for the comfort of the aged who are residents there.

The Yonkers Home for Aged and Infirm is but one of several institutions maintained in whole or in part by B'nai B'rith.

B'nai B'rith Planning to Renew Its Activities

Cincinnati, Aug. 21—(JTA) — With the eight B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations scheduled to open in as many universities in a few weeks, the B'nai B'rith Wider Scope Commission is planning to renew its activities for the coming season.

All of the seven B'nai B'rith district grand lodges have agreed to what is known as the Borinstein plan to raise funds for this work. This plan, suggested by Louis J. Borinstein, of Indianapolis, national chairman of the Wider Scope Committee, provides that each B'nai B'rith district should raise a quota equal to five dollars per member. The resultant income will be used to carry on the work of the Hillel Foundations, the A. Z. A., the Anti-Defamation League, Palestine housebuilding, and other activities of the Wider Scope.

HOPES NEW YEAR WILL BRING PROSPERITY TO PALESTINE

London, Aug. 21—(JTA)—"I join with you in trusting that the coming year be a year of prosperity in Palestine," General Arthur Grenfell Wauchope, High Commissioner designate of Palestine, telegraphed to Dr. Cyrus Adler, thanking him for the Jewish Agency's telegram of congratulation, which was sent to General Wauchope soon after the announcement of his appointment was made.

On July 28, Dr. Adler, on behalf of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, telegraphed General Wauchope assurances of the Agency's firm intention to co-operate loyally for the recognition of the Palestine Mandate and expressed the hope that General Wauchope's term in office would be marked by growing prosperity of the Jewish National Home and of Palestine as a whole.

The approval was given in formal acknowledgment of a recommendation by the city executive specifying the site and the purpose of the grant. Earlier in the year the City Council voted such a site be ceded to the Hebrew Consumptive Aid Society.

The Book Case

Comments on Jewish Authors and Their Books
By FRIEDA R. BIENSTOCK

Biography of Al Capone
Fred D. Pasley has done a biography of Al Capone. Those of you who are interested in the rule of the lawless may find this volume entertaining and informing reading. I read the volume with added interest because of the recent tragedy in our own New York when five little children were shot down while playing in the street near where gangsters were attempting to eliminate each other.

The one fault I can find with Mr. Pasley's book is that it tends to make out a case for Capone as a kind-hearted soul who is goodness himself to those in need. Even if this is true some of our murderers have been known as model family men and some of our arch fiends have had a reputation for quiet living when they chose. That is hardly enough reason to glorify Capone. For his kind-heartedness is nothing but cheap sentimentalism displayed where it will do the most good.

A book about Al Capone, which showed him up for the gunman he is and which displayed his indifference to public welfare and morality in a far more emphatic manner than has Pasley, would go far to eliminate the tendency on the part of our adolescent youth to sit and worship at the feet of the "brave" gangsters.

For Al Capone is a mere rat, a festering wound in the body of civilization and although he is a glorified personality he still remains a murderer, a cheat and a dealer in women's bodies for profit.

Read "Al Capone." (Garden City Publishing Co., $1.00). Then take a look at the ferret-eyed Capone whose photograph usurps the cover. The eyes of our foremost gangster betray his character far more accurately than does Mr. Pasley's portrayal which the author undoubtedly intended to be impartial!

"The Road to Oblivion"
I don't remember whether I recommended "The Road to Oblivion" by Vladimir Zenzinov and Isaac Don Levine for vacation reading. It has come back to my attention frequently in the past few days of scorching weather. I believe it will form a cooling contrast to the present heat wave and will besides furnish really thrilling reading.

Notes About Authors
Al Capone is quoted as definitely refusing all offers to write his autobiography. There's a gangster that has more sense than the publishers who made the offers!

Harry Salpeter is up to his neck in writing at Yaddo. First editions, even very rare ones are down in price along with everything else with contemporary authors faring worst.

Simon and Schuster inviting all famous authors who have been employed in Hollywood to submit their gags on that much kidded section for a book to be published shortly.

Several new publishing companies opening up in New York. A certain old and dignified publishing company reported ready to breathe the last gasp and consign its assets and authors (assets to a firm that can hold out for a while).

Rumors that at least two and maybe more of New York's dailies are to be merged persist.

The author of "Speakeasy Girl" is in Paris writing letters to the New York papers. They're snappy, too.

Aaron Marc Stein, author of "Her Body Speaks," is the editor of antiquities of the New York Evening Post. His first book was "Spirals."

Philip Rubin, who has been known to the Anglo-Jewish journalistic field for years and is an authority on modern Judaica, has left for Ireland and other points in Europe. He will continue to write and lecture on subjects pertinent to the field of Anglo-Jewish letters.

HEBREW TEACHERS' SEMINAR AT CAMP OSCEOLA, AUG. 26

Hendersonville, N. C., Aug. 21—(JTA)—Camp Osceola, near Hendersonville, N. C., will have a teachers' seminar in co-operation with the department of synagogue and school extension of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations on Wednesday, Aug. 26th, to Friday, Sept. 4th. The faculty includes Dr. Emanuel Gamoran, Union Educational Director, and Dr. Henry Englander, of the H. U. C. faculty.

The arrangements are in co-operation with Rabbis George Solomon of Savannah, Ga., and Milton Ellis of Greensboro, N. C. Inquiries should be sent to the Department of Synagogue and School Extension, Merchants Building, Cincinnati.

ST. LOUIS, MO., TO HAVE PERMANENT JEWISH HOUR

St. Louis, Aug. 21—(JTA)—St. Louis is to have a permanent Jewish radio hour over Station KMOX, according to an announcement by Charles Prince of the Associated Hebrew Schools and an assistant during the past year in the Hebrew course being given in the St. Louis high schools.

AMERICAN JEWISH PERIODICALS

There are few Jewish communities which are without some means of disseminating news. Practically all the large cities have their own separate publications, and the smaller communities subscribe to them or have neat minor papers of their own. In many cases there is a wide distribution of monthly or quarterly magazines. The spreading of the Jewish news of the day among Jews has therefore assumed an aspect of importance in the world of today.

In New York, where some of the best Jewish publications are printed, there seems to be room for more. The late Jewish Tribune is being replaced by a new weekly. So influential a figure as David Brown has accepted the management of the American Hebrew. There is likewise a rumor that Dr. Wise is going to establish a paper with his son as its editor. The Young Judaea Magazine is booked for a revival within the month. All these facts have more than a passing significance.

Our own publication has its place in Jewish affairs. With its weekly appearance in the homes of Rhode Island Jews, it brings the news and opinions of the affairs of the hour. Not unlike the larger and better known periodicals it fulfills a definite need in the life of American Judaism. In order to fan the flame of our religion and our pride of racial achievement, each Jewish paper attempts to set forth constantly those ideals and aspirations which Jews have always held dear. With more effect and with a clearer insistence than that of the Rabbi, the Jewish periodical awakens us to the actual and living Judaism of the world.

Because all this is true and significant, it becomes quite necessary for us to perpetuate the power and calibre of our Jewish periodicals in America. They are as much a part of our community lives as the synagogues and the temples, and their influence is farther reaching.

Privately owned in most cases, these papers and magazines must make many advances to commercialism, to a partial neglect of the cultural opportunities which they might wish to exploit for the benefit of the Jewish people at large. In some measure, then, it might be a new endeavor for men of means to found or contribute to American Jewish periodicals of real purpose and power to the larger benefit and enjoyment of the Jewish people. So representative a thing as a Jewish paper deserves the concentrated support of our most influential citizens.

Tidbits and News of
Jewish Personalities

"Here stood the first Jewish synagogue in the city of Chicago." And a son of Mrs. Kohn, Abraham Kohn, was a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, and presented Lincoln with a flag, when the President left in 1861 to assume the duties of his post.

Einstein On Saloons

Professor Einstein, in an article not so long ago in one of the American monthlies, after professing himself to be a total abstainer, deplored one result of the disappearance of the saloon. He pointed out that the cafes, where men gathered to drink in Europe, served also as a public forum, where the topics of the day were discussed, opinions ventilated and clarified. America, said Einstein, has now no such place. People as a whole, as a result, he thought, were deprived of a great educational influence.

The Revolutionary Taverns

It would be very easy to furnish any number of illustrations from American history substantiating the truth of this idea. In fact, some 20 years ago, Henry Adams, one of the most significant of American historians, pointed out that the American Revolution was largely born in the colonial taverns. And even Professor Beard points out that it was at the taverns, where men gathered for their liquor, that King George of England first was denounced as tyrant. All of the early American Revolutionary organizations generally held their meetings in the taverns. In fact, Raleigh Tavern in Virginia, became almost as much of a patriotic synonym as Faneuil Hall of Boston.

Trains and Saloons

The only thing that is left us today that serves as a substitute for these public forums is the smoking compartment of the trains.

A train ride like liquor seems in some mystic fashion to make men drop the ordinary inhibitions and become communicative. And you do hear some strange opinions.

There was A. J. for instance. He is a Jewish grocer on his way to California. By his looks—a very plain man. Without any pretensions to profundity or beyond the average culture.

Curing Selfishness

The trouble, said A. J. to me, as I listened, is with the family. And then A. J. revealed to me how proud he was of his children. "And what I can do with my children, any one can do."

"First of all," he said, "I wanted my children to be unselfish. At the bottom the trouble of the world is too much selfishness."

"How did I make my children unselfish?"

"Well, I'll just tell you one of the many devices, which I employed to impress unselfishness on their minds."

"Let us say, for instance, I was cutting a cake, and my wife, perhaps asked me for a slice. I always made it a point to give a noticeably larger slice to my wife. That was only one of many ways of graphically impressing unselfishness."

Wipe Those Tears Away, Baby

"Or take another childhood problem. The crying child. My children can't understand other children crying. How did I go about to secure this result? You will laugh when I tell you, but it worked."

"I would make it a point on numerous occasions to convey the impression, for instance, that I had hurt my hand or my foot. And when I did it, and the children expected a wry face, I always made it a point to smile. Don't forget that children are the most imitative of creatures. Crying doesn't alleviate their pain, and it's merely a senseless habit that children fall into from want of proper education."

What, Your Finger In Your Mouth!

"A friend of mine," continued A. J., "had a child, who was always sucking his thumb."

"I took that child to my home for a week, feeling sure that I could cure it of the habit."

"When I got the child home, I had a little talk with him. 'Philip,' I said, 'what is today?'

"Today," replied Philip, "is Sunday."

"Now tell me what tomorrow is—and the day after that. Philip answered: Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and so on."

"Listen, Philip," I said. "Today, tomorrow and Wednesday, I want you to suck your thumb as much as possible—you understand—suck it all the time. But Thursday and after that, you won't suck your thumb any more. So get busy—suck for all you're worth."

And I told all my children to remind Philip when he was not sucking his thumb to suck it—for beginning with Thursday, there would be no sucking. You'll laugh, and yet the fact is, that Thursday came around and not a word was said about thumb sucking, yet the child never once put his thumb in his mouth.

And there you have the homely philosophy of a man, who sells groceries—and while I smiled at some of the things he said, I could not help but feel that here, in this humble man was a potential philosopher.

In the Land of the Buffaloes

I spent some time also, in the offices of the Buffalo Jewish Review, though I failed to see the editor, Mr. Tepplitz.

"What is the outstanding fault of the Jews of Buffalo?" I asked Benjamin Bartzoff, the business manager of that paper. It is always more interesting to read criticism than praise, so I always prefer to know the faults. "The outstanding fault," said Bartzoff, "is the lack of coherence—a spirit of division among many groups."

But Bartzoff is hopeful that his paper is doing much toward bringing about an increasing spirit of unity.

effort has been likewise constructive and his presence on all occasions helpful. . . . Those who have been fortunate enough to enjoy the acquaintance of Rabbi Mazure as he worked among us, and still more those who have had the pleasure of association with him, in his many religious and civic activities, regret his departure and recognize it as a distinct loss to Sioux City.

Rabbi Mazure will commence his official duties with the ushering in of the Jewish New Year on Friday evening, Sept. 11. He will arrive here about Sept. 1.

Council of Jewish Women Camp Closed for Season

Prevailing Epidemic of Children's Diseases Throughout Country Prompts Move

Although it had been hoped to continue the Council of Jewish Women's Camp at Barrington until Sept. 1st, the fourth group of children will not be sent out on the advice of three physicians. This is purely a precautionary measure, due to the prevailing epidemic of various children's diseases throughout the country.

The third group of youngsters benefited greatly by their stay at camp, and upon their return to the city on Monday, camp was closed for the season.

It is hoped that next year a permanent Camp site for the Council of Jewish Women may be obtained.

Mrs. Saul Rothschild, camp chairman, expresses her sincere appreciation to all who assisted in making possible this year the Council Camp at Barrington for under-nourished children.

A Slight Mistake

By NINA KAYE

It was a joy to see Stella and Miriam Bergman swinging down Main street arm in arm. There was something so alive about them, so buoyant, so fresh and sweet and young. They were ideal daughters, everyone admitted that. Stella, with her artistic talent and her flare for colors and her home-making instinct, had turned the Bergman residence into one of the most charming homes in town. Miriam, with her gay, lighthearted laugh that went up the scale like the thrill of a bird, attracted the nicest young folks to their homes.

Always there was laughter floating out of the windows, hung with henna colored curtains embroidered in blue and yellow and green. In the summer, cars stood at the curb and girls in fluttery chiffons and young men in white tennis ducks or flannels came in and out.

And Mrs. Bergman sat in a secluded corner of the porch, behind the delicate tracery of the vines, quietly sewing, at the same time, taking her share of the gayety and happiness. In the evening, when her husband came home and the girls had gone out on their dates, she would recount the happenings of the days, just as she used to do when the girls were young and each day was eventful in their little lives.

"There's nothing more we could wish for," she said, trying to keep the complacent note out of her voice. "The girls are so popular and they are having such a good time. Soon, when the time comes, they will be married and—." She paused, unwilling to put into words the sum total of her happiness.

And then, black tragedy stalked down that quiet, tree-shaded street. Miriam was hurt in an automobile accident. The boy she had been driving with was fatally injured and when they brought the limp form of Miriam through the door where only gayety had tripped before, there seemed little hope for her.

The way Stella took the tragedy startled everyone. The devotion of the two girls was known, but Stella's life seemed to stop. The way she tended to the sick girl, the way her dark eyes glowed, deep in her sad face, was enough to frighten those who came to tip-toe into the sick-room and later to comfort the family. In some inexplicable way, Stella conveyed the feeling that she was responsible for the accident. Over and over she murmured, her hands lying inert in her lap, "Cy asked me to go riding with him. But I made Miriam go. I told her to go, I didn't want to. It should have been me. It should have been me. It should have been me!"

Miriam's body mended, but the light seemed to have gone out of her eyes. Life wasn't worth clinging to, this broken shred of life that would be hers, for the doctors were not sure that Miriam would be able to walk again. The Bergmans called one doctor after another. Each shook his head.

So, when the young doctor down the street, who had just hung out his shingle and hadn't even been called in, stopped Stella on the street and told her in his young voice, alive with hope, that he had seen miracles performed in Vienna and that he would like to look at her sister, Stella led him quietly in at the side door and up to the darkened room where Miriam lay.

From the moment Dr. Victor Simon entered the room, something electric happened to Miriam. In a month she was her old, laughing self again—though she could not yet move her legs. Dr. Simon came every day, dropping in before he started on his calls and again on his way back. Soon they were calling him Victor and he was calling Miriam and Stella by their first names.

Sometimes, after Miriam was asleep, he would come down the street and sit on the steps of the Bergman's porch, smoking his pipe and talking in his quiet, soothing voice. One night, when Mrs. Bergman was busy in the kitchen and her husband had gone down town to his lodge meeting—taking up their old life again, now that Miriam was better—Stella and Victor sat on the porch alone.

"I've wanted to talk to you alone for some time, Stella," he rose and came to sit beside her on the glider.

"Yes?" Stella's voice was low in the singing stillness of the night.

"I wanted to tell you—I wanted to ask you—" he stammered. "Well, the fact is I'm in love. I wasn't going to speak of it so soon after—"

"The accident?" Stella asked.

"Yes, the accident." He leaned toward her, his hand resting lightly on her arm.

Stella closed her eyes. All she could see was Miriam's wan face and remember all that Victor had done for her. What did it matter that she didn't love him? What did anything matter, except the gratitude she owed Victor?

He went on. "I didn't want to mention marriage so soon, but do you—?" He hesitated. "Would you—?"

In sheer pity at his bashfulness, Stella decided to help him out.

"Yes, Victor. I will marry you. Though I think you're right. We ought to wait just a bit. It is too soon after the accident."

Victor leaned back, a look of surprise on his face. He seemed utterly taken aback. "Didn't he expect to be accepted?" Stella asked herself.

Late that night, hearing Miriam awake in the next bed, Stella came to sit beside her and told her that she and Victor were going to be married.

Miriam gasped, "You and Victor! Why—Oh, I hope you'll be very happy." There was the suggestion of a sob in her throat as she spoke.

And the next day, they had to telephone Dr. Simon before he came on his regular visit. Miriam had fever.

But she wouldn't let him attend to her. She turned her face to the wall and begged them to leave her alone. She didn't want to get well. All she asked was that she be left alone.

Outside the door, Victor asked for details. Stella whispered that she had told Miriam about the engagement.

A deep red flush stole over his face. He went back into Miriam's room. When he came out he said simply, "She's sleeping now. She'll be all right. And," his voice rang with confidence, "we'll have her walking before you know it."

Mrs. Bergman wiped her forehead and sighed with relief. But Stella had seen something in Victor's eyes. She followed him to the front door.

"Victor," she put her hand on his sleeve. "Miriam loves you. That's what made her ill, my telling her about us. Don't you think you could care for her? She needs your love, Victor. It's the only thing that will make her well. I'm fond of you, Victor. But it wouldn't be hard to give you up—to Miriam."

"And I love her, Stella," he said simply.

Her mouth flew open in surprise. "Then why, why did you propose to me?" she demanded.

He laughed, a big, good-natured brotherly laugh. "I didn't. I was only asking you whether I should propose to Miriam, so soon after the accident. When you accepted me, I didn't know what to do."

Stella joined his laugh. "You should have told me I was making a slight mistake."

Hadassah Has Fine Exhibit at Paris Exposition

More Than Three Million Persons Have Attended; Modelled After the Tomb of Rachel

New York, Aug. 21—One of the most striking exhibits at the International Colonial Exposition at Paris this summer is that of the Hadassah Medical Organization, contained in the Palestine Pavilion. Reports indicate that more than three million persons have already visited the exposition this summer. Of those, a great many have paid compliment to the exhibit arranged by the Hadassah Medical Organization, which is supported and maintained by Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America. The exhibit is housed in a pavilion modelled after the tomb of Rachel. The architecture is of an Arabic type and shows the influence of the modernistic movement. This type is considerably in favor for buildings in Palestine today.

Within the building, the exhibition booths are arranged in definite sequence, showing to the fullest advantage the work of the Hadassah Medical Organization in Palestine. Models of the principal hospitals under the supervision of the organization have been erected and there are exhibits of the various phases of the clinical work, school hygiene, rural and district nursing, infant care as well as pharmacies and the X-Ray Institute. Pictures of Hadassah's activities, a history of the organization and a complete account of its activities is contained in the elaborate catalogue, issued by the Palestine Pavilion, in both French and English. A separate booth is devoted to an exhibition of the work conducted in the children's village, Meier Shfeye, which is the special project of Junior Hadassah.

The annual budget for the complete system of curative and preventive health work in Palestine, maintained by Hadassah, is $350,000 and the total budget of Junior Hadassah for its children's village and the Nurses' Training School is $50,000.

Mr. J. Ernstof of this city is a guest at the Matunuck Beach House in Matunuck.

Employees Take Month's Vacation Without Pay

Detroit, Aug. 21 — (JTA) — The United Hebrew Schools of Detroit are closed for a month's vacation, but for the first time since the traditional vacation is being taken, since 1918, all employees will go unpaid during the entire period. From janitors up, the scrub women in all buildings, office help, teachers, principals and the superintendent are taking this month's rest without pay, as a result of the trying conditions in which the schools find themselves.

In the past three years the budget of the United Hebrew Schools was cut from $75,000 to $50,000 a year. This year, as a result of difficult collections, the schools are thus far receiving only 75 per cent. of the quota assigned them in the recent Allied Jewish Campaign in spite of the success of the recent drive.

YOUR OLD TIRES ARE WORTH MONEY

trade them in on a new set of Firestone

CUM-DIPPED TIRES

THOSE same old tires may cost you a lot of money, however, if you leave them on your car in an effort to get out the last few thousand miles. Smash-ups from skidding—blowouts at critical moments—costly delays.

Better let us give you those miles in the way of an allowance toward a new set of Firestones. We, in turn, sell your old tires for spares without losing any money—a fact which accounts for our generous allowance.

Bring them in, now; don't risk further driving on old tires. It's dangerous!

SPORTING WORLD

NEWS WRITTEN FOR THE JEWISH HERALD BY GEORGE JOEL

THRILLING MOMENTS IN SPORTS AND GENERAL INFORMATION

After a mug has been writing a sport column for more than five years he automatically qualifies as an old timer and is privileged to put on a false beard, talk about "these old ears" and reminisce freely. It therefore behooves me at this moment to take advantage of this poetic license and regale you with a thrilling moment in sport that I had the good fortune to witness.

WHEN BENNY LEONARD FORGOT HIMSELF

It was in 1922, Benny Leonard was at his peak as a two-handed fighting man. He was the lightweight champion of the world. There wasn't a fighter in the country with the possible exception of his co-religionist, Lew Tendler, who could even make him breathe heavily. Money was plentiful and things in general were rosy. Benny was a very confident young man and as he allowed himself to gaze over the fistic landscape his eyes fell on the welterweight champion—Jack Britton. In 1917, when Benny had won the title from Freddie Welsh he fought and outpointed Britton and didn't see any reason why he couldn't do it again. With the usual fanfare and attendant ballyhoo Leonard and Britton signed articles to meet in a 15-round bout with the title at stake.

The bout was to be held at the Velodrome in New York City on the night of June 26. It was a natural draw and an immense crowd packed the wooden saucer which was used as a bicycle track on the night of the 26th. The fight started off timely enough with both boys feeling each other out. By the third round Benny showed that he was Britt's master. He was cuffing the heavier fighter around and outboxing him beautifully. Britt seemed unable to solve Benny's two-handed attack. Round after round went by and it was obvious that a new welterweight champion was to be crowned. Britt was tiring quickly. It was the 12th round. The crowd was tense, sensing a dramatic offering in the making. The boys boxed around. Benny tore in and out whipping blows to Britt's body. Jack was groggy, he tried to hold, but Benny slipped out of his tired grasping arms. Suddenly Benny crashed over a right to Britt's jaw and the welterweight went down. The packed throng rose as a man and in death-like silence, listened to the referee toll off the count. Benny a veteran of two hundred ring battles stood close by—the rule that a fighter must take a neutral corner when his opponent is down, was not in force. At the count of eight Britt rose from the floor, and as he got up on one knee, Benny, for some unaccountable and to this day, mysterious reason, rushed in and hit Britt before he had a chance to stand up. The fight was over right then and there, and was properly awarded to Britt on a foul. Leonard never made another attempt to gain this title. The crowd was stunned and when the fans regained their senses, almost tore down the Velodrome in an attempt to get at Leonard. It evidently had no serious effect on his popularity, because a month later in Jersey City, Leonard fought Tendler and drew a gate of $367,000, the largest ever collected for a lightweight fight.

THINGS ABOUT SPORT YOU PROBABLY DIDN'T KNOW

The first American Jew to win honors in Olympic games was Meyer Prinstein of Syracuse, N. Y., who while attending Princeton, won the running broad jump and also the running hop, step and jump events in both the 1904 and 1908 Olympic meets. Since then no other Jewish athlete has even qualified for these events.

In 1873, when Michigan challenged Cornell to a football game, President White of the latter college, put thumbs down on the proposition and made a classic wise crack, to wit: "I will not permit 30 students to travel 400 miles merely to agitate a bag of wind." A prexy who chattered like that in this day would soon lose his job.

The records kept of great football incidents include the names of very few Jewish players. Benny Friedman of Michigan is down for a 45-yard drop kick for a goal against Ohio State. In 1926 Benny Lom of California has his 95-yard run for a touchdown from scrimmage against Southern California in 1929, recorded. Jack Grossman is mentioned as having hurled a successful 55-yard forward pass against Catholic University.

ward pass against Catholic University.

Golf was first played in America in 1811 at Savannah, Ga., and not in Canada as was commonly believed. No Jews involved, but it is thought that Jewish shepherds in Jerusalem before the Christian era indulged in a form of golf. These ancient boys would hit pebbles around and see who could reach a certain objective in the fewest number of strokes. The clubs were bent tree branches and there were no greens or holes to discomfort the golfers.

Leo De Korn, one of Pennsylvania University's best all around minor athletes, played 144 holes (eight rounds) of golf in 12 hours, taking 1925 strokes to do it. This happened in New York City in June, 1930. It stands as a record of some kind. Anyway it is a lot of golf, and Leo is one of us.

Since 1924 all the national handball championship doubles teams have been composed of Jewish players.

Irving Jaffee's U. S. A. record for the one mile outdoor ice skating event made in 1928, is still to be bettered.

Despite the fact that Julius Seligson played through three years of intercollegiate tennis and lost only one match, he was crowned intercollegiate singles champion, which was in 1928. In 1929 he was disqualified in the semi-final round and in 1930 lost that one match which was in the finals.

The first time a national tennis tournament was held for boys, a Jewish kid named Bennie Letson, a student at the time in De Witt Clinton High school, in New York City, won this was in 1916. His wife, which he acquired in after years, is active among the women players today.

Since 1885 the U. S. L. T. A. has been ranking tennis players at the end of each season. In that time only one Jew was ever ranked and that was Julius Seligson, who got the No. 9 position in 1928. Contrary to accepted gossip, Dr. Rosenbaum never reached the coveted ten.

And so ends a column that should give the dopsters something to talk about. If you think you have found any mistakes in my facts be sure you look them up first. I did.

Examinations for a degree, which will be awarded for the first time by the Hebrew University, will also be given in October, according to the announcement.

S. Rabinowitz Wins Detroit Scholarship

Detroit, Aug. 21—(JTA)—The Jewish Welfare Board of this city has just announced the award of its $1000 1931-1932 scholarship for the Training School of Jewish Social Work in New York City to Samuel Rabinowitz, graduate of the University of Wisconsin.

Mr. Rabinowitz is at present a second year student at the school. Milford Stern is president and Dr. John Slawson is executive director of the Detroit Jewish Welfare Board.

NEW PALESTINE LAND LAW POSTPONED TILL SEPTEMBER

Jerusalem, Aug. 21—(JTA)—The publication of the Land Disposition Ordinance, scheduled to be promulgated on Aug. 20, simultaneously with the arrival of Lewis French, director of the Palestine development scheme, has been postponed until Sept. 7, the Jewish Telegraphic Agency learned recently.

The law, which is part of a series of restrictive land transfer laws of which the Protection of Cultivators Ordinance was the first, may be modified before it is made public as a result of the opposition of the Jewish Agency.

Jewish Program Will Open New 'Church of the Air'

New York, Aug. 21—(JTA)—A departure in radio whereby a new religious feature, the "Church of the Air," will be substituted for religious broadcasting on a commercial basis, is announced by William S. Paley, President of the Columbia Broadcasting Company. The new feature is to be broadcast over a nation-wide network with the co-operation of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish leaders.

The services will be launched on Sunday, Sept. 13, at 5 p. m., with an address by Rabbi Jonah B. Wise of Central Synagogue, New York, who is the chairman of the 1931 Joint Distribution Committee campaign. A Jewish musical program is being arranged, which will include the services of an outstanding Cantor. As outlined at present the Jewish feature will ordinarily go on the air about 2:30.

In addition to Rabbi Wise, Albert Ottinger, former attorney general of New York State, is named as the Jewish leader with whose co-operation the new religious feature has been evolved.

HAZEFIRAH, WARSAW HEBREW NEWSPAPER, DISCONTINUES

Warsaw, Aug. 21—(JTA)—The Hazeferah, only Hebrew daily in Europe, discontinued publication on Aug. 17, because of financial difficulties. Hazeferah was one of the oldest Hebrew publications in the world, having existed for 69 years with several interruptions.

One of the best known editors of the Hazeferah was Nahum Sokolow, now President of the World Zionist Organization. The closing of the Hazeferah marked the fourth Jewish paper in Europe to discontinue publication in the last few weeks. Nele Leben, a Bialystok Yiddish daily, closed two months ago. The Lodzer Tageblatt closed a few weeks ago and last week the Jewish Guardian, London Anglo-Jewish weekly, discontinued publication.

JEWISH COMMUNITY CENTER

More than 150 children were taken for a day's outing to Lincoln Woods last Thursday morning as a part of the closing program of the Jewish Community Center operated for the past seven weeks.

The youngsters left the Center at 10:30 o'clock in trucks, which were provided by Mr. Benjamin W. Grossman. Before departure Mr. Jules P. Goldstein, President of the Center, distributed noise-makers and flags to the children.

Upon arrival at the Lincoln Woods Recreation Field, the children had lunch and were provided with free milk. A program of athletic events were carried out, including wheelbarrow race, potato race, sack race, three-legged race, 50, 75, 100, 220 and 440-yard dashes, a baseball game between the boys and the girls, and a baseball game for the older boys. Ice cream and lolly-pops were distributed to the children before departure for home.

The entire program was in charge of Executive Director Jacob I. Cohen, assisted by the following:

- Nathan E. Pass, Molly Fineman, Betty Roy, Ida Roy, Ruth Samuels, Margaret Nahigian, Mildred Wine, Louis Silverman, Isaac Brown, Albert Brown, David Wallick, Howard Pass and Gertrude B. Tarnapol.

The outing brought to a close a seven week outdoor program carried on by the Center with a total attendance of more than 7000. In connection with the playground, a milk station was operated, believed to be the only one of its kind in Rhode Island. About 1486 half-pint bottles of milk were distributed to the children at a nominal cost. Showers were open daily with the result that more than 1000 children took advantage of the facilities.

Other activities offered the children were basketball, volley ball, ping-pong, checkers, horse-shoe pitching and a number of apparatus, including sand box, wading pool, see-saw, slide, giant stride and merry-go-round.

Maynard Suzman to be Bar-Mitzvah at Camp Mohican

Maynard F. Suzman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Suzman, of Hope street, Bristol, will be Bar-Mitzvah on Saturday, Aug. 22, at Camp Mohican, in-the-Berkshires, Palmer, Mass., where he is spending his summer vacation.

The program for the confirmation ceremony, to be held in the Camp Synagogue, includes the reading of the Haftorah and Mafftar by the young confirmant. After the services he will give a talk expressing his appreciation of the honor of his Bar-Mitzvah.

Fellow campers, councillors, directors of Camp Mohican and relatives of the confirmant are expected to attend.

Jewish Orphanage News

On Monday, the last group of children from the Jewish Orphanage, who attended the Scout Camps, returned home. This year six boys and ten girls were able to go to the Scout Camps, the largest number thus far enjoying Scout activities during the summer. There were also eight younger girls who attended the Camp of the Council of Jewish Women. A total of 24 children from the Orphanage thus enjoyed the Camp benefits this summer.

Not only was this the largest number of children ever from the Orphanage in a season, but for the first time all the girls were able to go. This left at home 20 younger boys, who have not had this opportunity for up-building.

Mr. Walter I. Sundlun, President of the Orphanage, together with all the Board of Directors, are gratified by the accomplishment of this year, but eagerly hope that another year it may be possible to find some way of including all children for Camp. This two weeks' variation in the regularity of living at home, is a fine stimulus for good health and contentment, and is the best practical single undertaking that results in prevention of illness of body and mind as well. The providing for legitimate and simple activity and recreation, which Camp life affords, is thus neither an extravagance nor a luxury, but a step toward correct welfare.

Only TRUTHFUL TIRE ADVERTISING WINS!

WHEN we advertised the fact that Firestone was furnishing us complete lines of Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires that not only met the price but beat the quality and construction of every grade of special brand tires sold by mail order houses and others, the mail order houses made vigorous protests to Better Business Bureaus and made demands upon newspapers not to accept Firestone or our advertising.

We cannot blame them for they did not want car owners to know that they could get, at no more cost, a better tire made by a leading manufacturer, bearing his name and guarantee plus our guarantee and our service.

When car owners awakened to this fact, they came to us, compared the sections we had cut from Firestone Tires and special brand mail order tires, and were astounded at the Extra Values we were giving.

As a result, our business and that of other Firestone Dealers throughout the country, increased so fast that it has been necessary for Firestone to run their factories twenty-four hours a day and Firestone sold more tires in April, May and June than in any like period in the history of the company.

In our advertising we do not make comparisons involving laboratory tests which you cannot verify except in a laboratory—neither do we make comparisons of construction or price based on misleading classifications such as first line tire, second line tire or third line tire*—we do not make comparisons to confuse and mislead you as to actual values and service—we only make statements and comparisons that you can verify for yourself in our store before you purchase the tire.

Come in today and get the greater safety, extra quality and extra values found only in Firestone Tires.

Firestone Service Dealers and Service Stores Save You Money and Serve You Better

"When the National Better Business Bureau realized that their Bulletin No. 634 was being taken advantage of by some advertisers they issued a Bulletin dated July 10th as follows:

"In our Bulletin No. 634 entitled 'Definitions of Terms Used in the Tire Industry' we published definitions of First Line — Second Line — Third Line — Heavy Duty and Super Heavy Duty Tires.

"Our definitions pointed out, 'Although each manufacturer's or distributor's first line tire may represent his best standard size 4 or 6 ply tire, there is not necessarily any equality of competitive first line tires as to materials, workmanship or price.' This interpretation also applies to all lines of tires.

"We therefore recommend that advertising to the consumer shall avoid the use of these terms for the purpose of comparing competitive products."

*A "Special Brand" Tire is made by a manufacturer for distributors such as Mail Order houses, oil companies and others, under a name that does not identify the tire manufacturer to the public, usually because he builds his "best quality" tires under his own name. Firestone puts his name on every tire he makes.

Double Guarantee — Every tire manufactured by Firestone bears the name Firestone and carries Firestone's unlimited guarantee and ours. You are doubly protected.
