Talking to One's Self

That gambling business down in Long Beach which is so filling the New York papers is interesting but not for the reason that it is played up. Personally, I can never get excited about the importance of gambling raids. If people want to gamble, say I—let them gamble. Jews don't get excited about gambling. Just as they don't get excited about taking a "schnapps." Those are not particularly vices to Jews. And while I don't do a lot of things that perhaps a good Jew should, still on these points, it seems to me, they have a more rational point of view. Furthermore, say I, if you really are out to stop gambling—what about the Stock Exchange, what about the gambling in real estate? In their social consequence, these latter types of gambling are far more pernicious than pinochle playing.

But this Long Beach business interests me for quite another reason. Here, all the time we have been talking about the 100 per cent. Jewish city of Tel Aviv. Well, here is another—if not 100 per cent.—almost 100 per cent. Jewish city only some 20 miles from New York City. Its Mayor is Frank—a Jew, and its Chief of Police—Grossman, another Jew—and so on down the line—almost the entire outfit, including the population as a whole, is Jewish.

And in another respect, it is similar to Tel Aviv. It is a beach city. Yet compare the two. Who would think of trying to show off with Long Beach as with Tel Aviv? Tel Aviv has two daily papers, published in Hebrew, and if you ask me, they are as good and better than most of the English dailies, published in the United States—I mean for towns of corresponding size. Tel Aviv has art museums, concerts, lectures.

And Long Beach has hot dogs, and gambling raids.

That was a good rejoinder that young fellow gave to the Jewish "cultured" anti-Semite on the grounds in front of the New York Library the other day. The Jewish anti-Semite, who prides himself on his culture and freedom from bias, remarked: "All the persecution that the Jews have gotten down the ages they have merited—and more."

And that blond young man, standing around, took a good look at him and said: "Well, looking at you, I think you are right."

"Aren't you a Jew?" continued the blond young man.

"No, I am no Jew. I don't believe in the Bible. I don't go to synagogue. I don't take any stock in the Jewish religion."

"But, aren't you a Jew? Isn't your father, your mother—Jewish? Wasn't your grandfather and grandmother Jewish?"

"That is beside the point. What my parents are doesn't affect me," continued the Jewish anti-Semite.

"Oh, yeah!" continued the blond young man. "Try to tell that to the goyim when you are looking for a job."

The conversation then drifted to other topics—to war and peace, etc.

"If I had my way," said the Jewish anti-Semite, who has been reading too many books without digesting them, "I would place a javelin in the hand of every child. Teach him war. The history of humanity is the history of war. Man, biologically and psychologically, requires war."

"I see you have been reading Faure," returned another in the group. "That fellow is cuckoo and he has made you cuckoo with him. He talks of the pugnacity instinct as being essential. Of course, it is, but you don't need warfare to express and cultivate the pugnacity instinct."

"You and I have no javelins in our hands now. The chances are that I won't break your nose, though I am tempted to, and yet we are both displaying right now the pugnacity in-

LEWIS GOLDBERG IS NAMED FOR MASS. SUPERIOR COURT

To Fill Place of Judge Elevated to Position Refused by Frankfurter; Is Active in Jewish Affairs

Boston, Aug. 5—(JTA)—Lewis Goldberg, former member of the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities and prominent Jewish affairs, was nominated Monday for the Massachusetts Superior Court by Governor Joseph B. Ely.

Mr. Goldberg was named to succeed Judge Henry P. Lummus, who was elevated to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Judicial Court, which Professor Felix Frankfurter of Harvard Law School declined.

Mr. Goldberg is a prominent member of the Jewish community and is affiliated with the Kehillath Israel Congregation of Brookline. He is chairman of its Hebrew School Committee and is active in Zionist work. Mrs. Goldberg was formerly President of New England Hadassah. Mr. Goldberg is an observant Jew. His father recently died in Palestine.

JEW BREATHE MORE FREELY AS NAZIS LOSE MAJORITY

Nazis Secure 230 Mandates; Socialists Lose 10 Seats; Bruening Party in Strategic Position

Berlin, Aug. 5—(JTA)—The Jews of Germany breathed more freely when the final election results, broadcast after midnight, made clear that Adolf Hitler's National Socialist Party has not gained a majority in the Reichstag. For the second time within four months Hitler's forecast of dictatorship by the vote of the people has been blasted.

The National Socialists polled 13,732,000 votes of a total of 36,976,000 votes cast, gaining a total of 230 seats. The vote represents an increase of 7,331,210 votes over the Nazi poll of 1930 and a gain of 113 seats.

The Nazis received 37.4% of the total vote cast and even in a combination with the Nationalists allied with Dr. Alfred Hugenberg, who won 41 seats, he cannot hope to control the Reichstag.

Jewish leaders in Germany are pleased with the results of the Reichstag election to the extent that the results failed to give the Nazis a majority.

It is emphasized, however, that the fight for the maintenance of Jewish rights must not be regarded as ended.

The Central Union of German Citizens of the Jewish faith, in a statement to the Jewish Telegraphic Agency Monday declared that "the election results confirm that, within the German nation, no majority exists for the desire to deprive Jews of their rights. This, however, means nothing as far as the different political combinations of individual parties are concerned. Should it come to a Nazi-Center coalition, we are certain that the Center will energetically combat any open attempts against the Jews."

The Central Union statement says further that now that the Nazis have become the strongest single party in the Reichstag, the Central Union must conduct a stronger campaign against libelous attacks upon the Jews.

The "Juedische Rundschau," organ of the Zonist Federation, stated editorially Tuesday that the elections have proven that the Nazis are not losing their present strength in the Reichstag and that they may become menacing if law projects similar to the Prussian confiscation law come before the Reichstag.

The paper expresses the hope, however, that the Center Party will always oppose measures aimed against the Jews and that Hitler will be influenced by the reaction of public opinion abroad, which has condemned anti-Semitism.

Next to the Nazis the largest deputation in the Reichstag will be composed of the Socialists, who won 133 seats, which represents a loss of ten seats over their representation in 1930.

DOORS OF CLINIC LOCKED AS PATIENTS SEEK TREATMENT

Dr. Cowles May Seek Court Decision in September; Patients Treated Free at His Office

New York, Aug. 5—(JTA)—The vestry of the church of St. Mark's-on-the-Bouwerie locked its doors on Monday to the Body and Soul Clinic and, it became known, indicated that the clinic will not be permitted to open again after the month's suspension to which Dr. Edward S. Cowles, director of the clinic, consented after a long period of controversy.

The action of the vestry brings to a close ten years of service on the part of the clinic and the closing, it is charged, is due to racial prejudice because the majority of the patients treated are Jews.

The eviction notice is signed by Dr. William N. Guthrie, rector of the church, together with other members of the vestry. The latter's communication, according to the Herald Tribune, declared:

"In accordance with the foregoing statements of the corporation and its rector, you are hereby notified that the use of the church by the clinic will under no circumstances be permitted after July 31, 1932. We also notify you specifically that the use of the church will not be permitted for use by the clinic after the suspension beginning Aug. 1, 1932, and ending Aug. 31, 1932, nor at any time thereafter."

"We trust that this letter is sufficiently definite and certain to cause you to remove any property that you may have on the premises of St. Mark's without further notice." This letter, dated July 26, was received by Dr. Cowles, on July 21st.

LEHMAN MAY BE REFUSED SUPPORT IF WALKER IS OUSTED

New York, Aug. 5—(JTA)—Tammany Hall may refuse to support Lieut. Gov. Herbert H. Lehman as candidate for Governor, if Governor Roosevelt removes Mayor James J. Walker from office, the World-Telegram states.

The opposition of Tammany Hall is threatened as a retaliatory measure. Lieut. Gov. Lehman has the support both of Governor Roosevelt and Alfred E. Smith, former Governor of New York State, and former Democratic candidate for the Presidency of the United States.

Mr. Justice Brandeis

A BOOK REVIEW BY MARK EISNER

numerous periodicals. Felix Frankfurter has collected six of these articles, each an estimate of Mr. Justice Brandeis' judicial labors, from different points of view, varying from a non-technical discussion of his social views, to a specialist's summary of his contributions to the law of the regulation of railroads.

Mr. Frankfurter, in his preface to this volume, warns us that it is not a complete study in the nature of Beveridge's "John Marshall," but that it "has a much more modest intention. It is a collection of sketches, not a life-size portrait." Characterization of the six essays constituting this book as "sketches" does not quite do them justice. Sketches they are, but they do not partake of the casualness so often associated with this term. These sketches show the care and thoroughness which a mural painter bestows upon his cartoons. And as invaluable as a cartoon is in the painting of a mural will these sketches be to the biographer of the future who attempts to paint a complete portrait of Mr. Justice Brandeis.

While avowedly the occasion for the writing of these essays, Mr. Brandeis' birthday is not the only reason for their timeliness. Justice Brandeis is much more than a great judge. He is an outstanding exponent, and by reason of his position on the Supreme Court, with its veto power over State and National Legislation, the most powerful exponent of a social and economic attitude. Today, when all social and economic views are being questioned in every mind, and discussed on every tongue, a study of those of Mr. Brandeis' is especially significant and interesting.

An estimate of Mr. Justice Brandeis' work to date is important for another reason—it is only recently that, as a result of new appointments, Mr. Justice Brandeis finds only rare occasion to dissent with the decisions of the court. His dissents of the past are more and more finding their rewards in the expressions of the present majority, of which he is a part.

The first essay by Chief Justice Hughes is a most eloquent tribute to the brilliance of Mr. Justice Brandeis' mind and the originality of his method. His power of analysis is likened to "the knife and skill of the surgeon exploring the operations of the social organism with the purpose of cure." He is called "the master of both microscope and telescope"—the latter in bringing in distant but related facts. Mr. Chief Justice Hughes emphasizes the necessity of as many possible points of view being represented on the Supreme Court, and implies that Mr. Justice Brandeis is especially valuable in this respect.

Max Lerner's "The Social Thought of Mr. Justice Brandeis" sees the justice in the thick of the battle centering around the economic issues before the court, and as pre-eminent in sharply defining these issues, especially that between the "realities of social change and the realities of vested interests and ideas."

Mr. Lerner emphasizes, as do most of the other writers in the book, the superb preparation of Mr. Justice Brandeis for his task in the court. After establishing his private practice he became what Mr. Lerner calls "People's Counsel"—employing all his skill in behalf of economic and social liberalism, especially in the fields of labor, railroad and anti-trust law. He was perhaps the only great lawyer not in the service of the great corporations, and the only prominent liberal capable of concreteness, attention to details and constructive thinking. These years gave him a detailed knowledge, unique among judges, of unions, corporations and banks and their methods, of the factual results of our economic and political forces and practices, and of the faults and virtues of our institutions. Mr. Lerner concludes that Mr. Justice Brandeis, as a result of this background, is immersed in the movements and problems of his own age, in contrast to the transcendentalism of Mr. Justice Holmes.

Mr. Lerner, before attempting to formulate the philosophy of Mr. Justice Brandeis, points out the difficulty of this task, resulting from the fact that Mr. Justice Brandeis himself has never made such a formulation. Without a priori principles, he has taken each set of facts and problem presented to him, and developed what he considered a proper solution. A study of his opinions is necessary to discover the coherent philosophy which has developed in this manner. Practically never does he, in the manner of Mr. Justice Holmes, reveal his underlying thought by glowing sentences, pregnant with philosophical meaning. Mr. Lerner compares Mr. Justice Holmes and Mr. Justice Brandeis in another respect. While both are realists, Mr. Justice Holmes' realism is psychological, with emphasis on the permanence in human nature. Mr. Justice Brandeis, on the other hand, is an economic realist, with his greatest interest in the ever-changing picture resulting from the interplay of social and economic forces.

Mr. Lerner believes that the appointment of Mr. Justice Brandeis was a turning point in the judicial process. He is one of those rare judges who insist upon constant contact with the extra-judicial world, who face unflinchingly the problem of the reaction between law and society, and seek to close the gap between them. Other judges emphasize political theory and legal precedent. Mr. Justice Brandeis is "geared to social change."

Space does not permit of more than outline summary of the social and economic philosophy of Mr. Justice Brandeis and the reaction thereto of Mr. Lerner and the other writers in the volume reviewed. Mr. Justice Brandeis, often considered a radical, is essentially a capitalist. He regards present-day ills due, not to the nature of our institutions, but to their defects. The fundamentals of his creed are liberty and individualism, yet he does not believe in laissez faire. He respects private property, but wishes it more equally distributed. He has no objection to capital, but desires it to flow more freely. Competition he considers essential. His prescription for the diseases infecting society is the holding of business to its social responsibilities by judicious governmental intervention. No rights are absolute—responsibilities and duties are most important. He feels that one of the essentials in attaining this is the lessening of centralization, and the return to the smaller business unit.

Mr. Lerner points out that in none of his ideas is Mr. Justice Brandeis absolute. In his aim to attain freedom, justice and opportunity for labor and others in capitalism, he applies the pragmatic test. Without prejudice against corporations, or for unions, he studies each problem, seeks for the underlying reason for its existence, looks at the treatment of similar situations in different countries, and says: "Is this instance good or bad?" He is a sincere believer in experiment. To him no rule is final—we must learn by experience. He

CENTER BROADCASTS

PLAYGROUND ACTIVITIES

Although nothing has been said in these columns for the past few weeks, nevertheless the summer playground for children has been carried on with unabated interest.

Every day from 9:30 to 5, the Center serves as host to hundreds of youngsters who participate in a healthful outdoor program. The playground opened July 5th, will conclude its activities with a picnic at Lincoln Woods, Thursday, Aug. 18th. Through the kindness of Mr. Abe V. Flink, Treasurer of the Center, the children will be treated with ice cream and milk in honor of a birthday of a member in his family. Mr. Jules P. Goldstein, President, has secured contributions from Colonel Joseph Samuels and Charles Brown to cover the expense of transportation and other necessities for the picnic.

It is expected that other members of the Center will make contributions of candies and noise-makers. The children will be transported to Lincoln Woods under the supervision of Executive Director Jacob I. Cohen and assisted by Nathan Pass, Mollie Fineman and Gertrude B. Tarnapol.

MEMBERSHIP OVER 1000

The office files at the Center have revealed the news today that the Center membership for 1932 has reached the figure of 1025, including all classes of membership. In spite of the temporary lull in activities many members have sent their dues during the summer months, thus helping us to increase the 1932 enrollment.

Center officials are certain that before the fall season begins and the new year rolls around 1932 membership enrollment will show still greater increase.

GRAFTON POWER REFINANCING

(An Editorial from the Concord, N. H., Monitor of July 28, 1932)

Public Service Commissioners of four states Tuesday considered the matter of permanent financing for the Grafton Power Company development at Fifteen Mile Falls. Altogether there is $32,000,000 involved, and of this some $20,000,000 is now in the form of obligations which mature next December.

What transpired at the meeting to consider this situation was not made public, but presumably ways and means of raising the $20,000,000 in the course of the next few months was the primary objective of the conference. Certainly New England is interested in seeing the necessary permanent financing accomplished.

The great public utilities are as vulnerable as other businesses a time of stress has shown. Whether one believes they have been over-capitalized or not, there should be no one who would wish that the Grafton Power Company fail in the conversion of a considerable temporary debt incurred in building up a New Hampshire resource. To fail in the process would mean receivership and possibly bankruptcy for the utility, and much grief to New England as a whole.

New Hampshire should be particularly interested, not that it will as a state have very much to do or say about what is done, but because it has benefited by the tremendous investments made in the development of Connecticut water powers, developments the state or its citizens by themselves could not have accomplished without the assistance of outside capital. New Hampshire, too, should be concerned about the ability of Massachusetts and Rhode Island to carry this financial load and the New Hampshire Public Service Commission might properly encourage conversion of the $20,000,000 temporary debt into some form of permanent financing.

This is just one more of the many jobs still left to be done in this period of readjustments, and the more rapidly these jobs can be accomplished the sooner all New England will be restored to normal business activity.

Other talent is now being considered and as soon as final selections will be made it will be announced by the committee.

GETTING READY FOR THE FALL

With the assistance of the City Public Aid Department employes, the Center is now getting a thorough scrubbing, painting and cleaning. Every room in the house is being touched up so when the fall season arrives it will be spic and span to receive thousands to partake in the educational, social and cultural opportunities offered by the Center.

JUST A REMINDER

Monday evening, Oct. 10th, is an important date to remember, because on that evening the first Jewish social event of the season will take place at the Arcadia Ballroom. The event follows immediately upon the conclusion of Yom Kippur and serves as a welcome relief after a day in the Synagogue. Yom Kippur Night dances have become an institution in Providence and usually attract over two thousand people from this city and nearby communities.

Jewish Orphanage News

Children to be Given Full-Day Outing Tuesday at Narragansett Pier

The Jewish Orphanage children's horizon is brightened at present by the coming of a "Narragansett Pier Day." Summer activities are in full swing at the Orphanage, and each has some particular flavor, but next week's main attraction is an outstanding event.

Through the interest of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Brier, the boys and girls of the Home will be transported to Narragansett Pier the morning of Tuesday, Aug. 9th given a complete chicken dinner at one of the hotels there at noon, facilities will be provided them in the afternoon for swimming and games on the sand, to be followed by refreshments before the homeward journey to Providence.

Mr. and Mrs. Brier have invited Dr. and Mrs. Wolfenson and Miss Silverman and Mr. Katz, of the Home Staff, to accompany the children.

CHILDREN ENJOY MARIONETTES

With mid-summer upon us, some interesting little playmates are pirouetting their way into the hearts and home of the boys and girls of the Jewish Orphanage of Rhode Island.

They come from a world all their own, of sunshine, and are gay, fantastic, altogether charming little creatures. Already they have captured the imagination and affection of the Orphanage children. These genial, spritely marionettes—for that is what the newcomers are—are giving the youngsters of the Home their first taste in "puppet-art." They furnish "something to do" that is full of joy and fascination; they involve a variety of crafts—carpentry, sewing, play-writing and management—and as the busy fingers of childhood in the Home can select the thing that suits him or her best, or has the most lure in it, they bring in their wake a development of dramatic talent as well as a splendid training in color, speech and rhythm. Because children live so near the whimsical land of make-believe, these tiny actors seem like real playmates.

At the end of the play, the children were eager to see how the puppets were manipulated, and they got a thrill out of peeping behind the scenes.

CORN-POPPING HELD ON HOME GROUNDS

Also, on this week's calendar was another event of interest, in the varied recreational program which Dr. Louis B. Wolfenson, the Executive Director of the Jewish Orphanage, arranged. It was an evening devoted to popping corn on the spacious Home site. Not the least of the fun for the children was their gathering of rocks for the making of a hearth, as well as firewood from the supply provided by nature in the Orphanage region. The youngsters handled the popping utensils in an effective manner, showing a great deal of enthusiasm.

Paterson, Aug. 5 — (JTA) — The Kashruth controversy that raged here for a considerable length of time and that was believed settled when a committee of prominent citizens intervened, has broken out anew with charges by Rabbi William Wittenstein that "50 per cent. of the meat sold in supposedly kosher butcher shops in this city, is not in accordance with Jewish Dietary laws."

Los Angeles, Aug. 5—(JTA)—While the Ku Klux Klan has been considered a dead organization throughout the country for the past few years, several incidents within the past six months in and around Los Angeles indicate that it is still flourishing to some extent in the Southwest.

200 WORKERS TO LAUNCH MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN, SEPT 6

At a luncheon meeting at the Narragansett Hotel, held Aug. 2nd, it was unanimously voted to officially launch a membership campaign for the benefit of the Jewish Home for the Aged, to commence on Tuesday, Sept. 6th. The committee felt that this date would be the most logical time to begin without interfering with the Community Fund Drive. Two hundred workers, consisting of ten lady captains and ten men captains, each with teams of ten, will be organized to cover the entire state, thus giving every Jewish man and woman an opportunity to participate as a member in the work of Jewish Home for the Aged. Mr. Samuel M. Magid is in charge of the Initials Gifts Committee and will continue the work with his committee until the official date of the drive. The following teams will be organized.

Ladies' Association of the Jewish Home for the Aged, Mrs. Jennie Goldsmith, Captain; Mrs. Black Captain; Council of Jewish Women, Mrs. Borod, Captain; Miriam Hospital; Temple Beth-Israel; Temple Emanu-El; Hadassah; Ladies' Auxiliary, Jewish War Veterans, Mrs. Hoffman, Captain; Ladies' Union Aid; Montifiore Ladies' Hebrew Benevolent; Jewish Mothers, Alliance of the North End; Women's Pioneer Club; South Providence Hebrew Institute Ladies' Association; Touro Fraternal; Providence Zionist District; Temple Emanu-El Sisterhood; Beth-Israel Sisterhood; Jewish Community Center; R. I. Workmen's Beneficial Association; Pawtucket; Newport; Out of Town; Outlet Company; Trade Organizations, Captain, Benjamin N. Kane. It is the hope of this committee that between 1000 and 1500 members will be enrolled in this campaign.

DEDICATION OF TEMPLE AND SIUM HA TORAH, SEPT 25

Under the guidance of the Orthodox Rabbis of the state, a most impressive and inspiring ceremony will be carried out on Sunday, Sept. 25th, at 2 p. m.

On this occasion, the Synagogue within the Jewish Home for the Aged institution will be officially dedicated and new Torahs will be brought in. The committee in charge will consist of all the Orthodox Rabbis and the Presidents of the various Congregations in the state. There are three Temples and twelve Orthodox Synagogues in the city of Providence and four more in the state that will be represented on this committee. The ceremony of bringing in the new Torahs under a canopy or Chupa, to be met by a delegation and music and finally the inscription of the letters in the new Torah, has been carefully planned in accordance with the Jewish customs by Rabbi H. D. Bachrach, Rabbi Joshua Werner, Rabbi O. W. Werner, Rabbi I. Bick, Rabbi Shigal and Mr. M. P. Ostrow.

LADIES' ASSN. ORGANIZING BRILLIANT DONORS' LUNCHEON

At a meeting of the Executive Board of Ladies' Association, the President, Mrs. Jennie Goldsmith, empowered to organize a Donors' Luncheon to be given some time during January or February. Each one of the ladies who will participate in this luncheon will undertake to raise twenty-five dollars during this period. Unique and ingenious ways and means have been devised by the ladies to raise this amount in order not to burden the community with too many solicitations. Thus, some of the ladies are raising their pro rata, acting as chauffeurs, while others are giving private entertainment parties in the form of bridges, musicals, etc. One of the ladies is raising her quota by selling cherries which she purchases on the trees of a farmer.

This luncheon will be combined also with the idea of commemorating the 20th anniversary of the Ladies' Organization of the Jewish Home for the Aged and the Ladies' Union Aid Society. A number of ladies are already at work in raising this amount and various committees will be appointed to work out the details of the arrangements in order to make this luncheon, not only a financial, but also an outstanding social event.

MRS. LENA BEBAR MOURNED BY GUESTS OF HOME

The funeral services were held from the parlors of Max Sugarman, the undertaker. All the guests in the Home filed out to the procession and a highly impressive ceremony was carried out by the reciting of the El Mol Raichmim.

The Iron Hand In a Velvet Glove

By BERNARD M. GOLDOWSKY

Several years ago my attention was directed to an advertisement of the Bay View Hotel, Bay View, Maine, that appeared in an automobile route guide wherein the management announced boldly, "No Jewish Patronage Solicited."

I immediately brought that matter to the attention of the distributors of the said "Guide" and at the same time addressed a letter to the management of the Bay View Hotel, saying, among other things, "The Jews have out-lived many Hamans and Fords and will be found doing business at the old stand long after the management of the Bay View Hotel is gone and forgotten."

In the following issue of the "Guide" the advertisement of the Bay View Hotel was missing.

I am reminded of that incident at this time because recent events convince me that the state of Maine still has its full quota of bigoted summer hotel and camp keepers. Four out of six who advertise in a newspaper call special attention to the fact that they cater solely to a "Christian Clientele."

However, although the new phraseology, "Christian Clientele" conceals the anti-Semite's iron hand in a velvet glove, it is, nevertheless, a vast improvement over the old classic, "No Jews or Dogs Allowed."

Perhaps in the near future we shall be favored with another modification, or else those Maine summer hotels and camps will be owned or managed by Jews. Who can tell?

Many, if not the majority of hotels in Saratoga Springs are owned or managed by Jews since the day the Jewish banker, Seligman, was refused admittance to Judge Hilton's Grand Union Hotel.

We Jews have an over-abundance of patience. For centuries we have been waiting and hoping for another day. But like the lighthouse in the midst of a dark and troubled sea we must continue to light the way to those who are still groping in a medieval darkness of intolerance.

We must continually and persistently flood the dark spot of bigotry with the golden light that emanates from the Synagogue, Home for the Aged, Orphanage, Hospital, Dispensary, "Center," etc.

Incidentally, at this writing the Jewish Home for the Aged of Rhode Island is in urgent need of a dues-paying membership for its maintenance.

Those who are blessed with the wherewithal—never mind losses—should not wait for some one to approach them in this hot weather, but should enroll at once by mail.

London Roumanian Legation Says Bronstein Proved Head Of Revolutionary Committee

London, Aug. 5—(JTA)—The Roumanian Legation in London, in a statement to the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, recently, declares that Samson Bronstein, tortured Zionist leader of Yedinez, Bessarabia, was identified as the President of the committee which endeavored to form revolutionary organizations in the villages.

The statement, addressed to the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, is duplicated in communiques sent to other London papers, including The Daily Herald, which featured the Bronstein torture.

The Roumanian Legation, which has been silent on the Bronstein case for all this time, now states that as far back as May 7th, the District Inspector of Czernowitz took disciplinary measures against Capt. Panisoara.

The inspector allegedly discontinued his further inquiries because a public trial had been ordered, which was postponed because of the summer court recess.

Obviously there is a discrepancy and a contradiction in the statements issued by the two legations abroad, inasmuch as the torture of Samson Bronstein began on May 7th and lasted through the night. Minister Charles A. Davila, Roumanian envoy in Washington, moreover, has stated that an investigation of the torture of Bronstein before on May 29th.

What a pleasant way to cook a meal!

You don't have to "potwatch" an electric range

It cooks for you automatically. The electric range measures the exact amount of heat required and times the cooking with split-second accuracy. Come in and let us explain how it does this and why you never have to baste a roast or supervise any cooking process with an electric range. Think how pleasant it must be to spend your usual cooking time with your family or friends, and to be free from cooking cares. Think how pleasant it must be to have walls and woodwork stay spic and span, to have shining pots and pans, and a kitchen as cool as your other rooms. And what a convenience it is to cook this quick, economical way. Don't wait any longer to begin to enjoy cooking comfort. Install a modern electric range now. Then you will learn how pleasant it is to cook electrically.

THE CHARGE OF ANTI-SEMITISM

The recent closing of the body and soul clinic at St. Mark's Church in the Bowerie has been interpreted by some Jewish editors as a show of anti-Semitic prejudice on the part of Bishop Manning. This clinic, conducted by Dr. Cowles, was originated to help those people without means to solve their mental and spiritual illnesses through scientific treatment. It happened, however, that a large percentage of these who applied for help were Jews. Therefore arose the feeling of the officials of the church, so it is asserted, that the services of the clinic were necessary no longer. Dr. Cowles, it may be added, thought differently; and he allowed the patients of the former clinic to apply to his more exclusive Park avenue offices for help.

Bishop Manning has not replied specifically to the charge of prejudice, nor has he given a wholly valid reason for the closing of the clinic in his diocese. Whether the use of the church for clinical purposes seems to him unorthodox or not is a question. At the same time, if the charge of anti-Semitism in this case has no foundation, there are other factors that might be considered seriously.

Religion, no matter what the sect or creed, has generally existed for the purpose of giving spiritual sustenance and healing to man. In certain ages of civilization, religion was not confined to elaborate and expensive buildings, attached to which were privileged and vastly overpaid dignitaries. Today, despite the changes wrought by Puritanism, religion has demanded good business men as well as great spiritual leaders to make it successful. In most cases, therefore, the average community has large and beautiful houses of worship.

These temples and churches are erected at a great cost to the community at large. In the use of them, however, there is much to be deplored. One or two services a week, lasting a few hours each, do not warrant the upkeep of an expensive building. There are many uses for which they might be found adequate in their empty hours, particularly those uses which are closely allied to those of the church itself.

Since a church is designed for spiritual healing, such a clinic as was carried on by Dr. Cowles at the church of St. Mark's in the Bowerie was nothing more than an added justification of the cost and erection of the building. The disposing of the clinic as unnecessary is to state that even religion itself is unnecessary. That interpretation is scarcely the one which Bishop Manning would like to have given to his present attitude in this particular case. But it is the one which must be considered if we are unwilling to believe the charge of anti-Semitism against so representative an American churchman.

By the Way

Tidbits and News of Jewish Personalities

By DAVID SCHWARTZ

stinct. Business—Love—Sports — all forms of life offer expression for that instinct. War is therefore unnecessary as far as this instinct is concerned.

What is the matter with me? Here I was standing at Columbus Circle, the Hyde Park of America.

On one corner, Christian evangelists were soap-boxing for a doctrine once urged by some Jews called Jesus, Paul, etc.

Nearby was standing an Irish Communist preaching the doctrine of certain Jews called Marx and Lasalle. As the Christian revivalists broke forth into some church hymn, the Communists broke into the I. W. W.:

"You'll have pie when you die
In the Sky, bye and bye."

And further over was standing a Jewish Atheist, damning religion. And yet I stood, I am afraid, somewhat coldly to all. Well, if I don't sympathize with the Christian revivalists, that might be understood. If I don't grow enthusiastic about Atheism, that might be understood. But neither Christian, Atheist, Communist—what then am I?

And why shouldn't I be a Communist? After all, Marx certainly seemed right in some of his prophecies. For instance, in the growing concentration of wealth. His economic interpretation of history, seems also to have a lot to commend it. Why then, so chilly? I ask myself.

And I answer that perhaps it is because I am too much of a libertarian. I cherish individualism too much to care for Socialism. And then I say to myself, but aren't you just alibiing yourself with empty phrases. Libertarianism, individualism. They are nice words. But pray, how much chance has the individual under present conditions, and with the economic struggle lessened, wouldn't his individualism be given more opportunity?

will not allow the doctrine of stare decisis to interfere, believing its application should be strictly limited in constitutional cases (see dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 76 L. Ed. 590, decided since the publication of the book).

Mr. Lerner fears that the social and economic views of Mr. Justice Brandeis are probably doomed to failure, that they are too optimistic in their insistence that there is no essential conflict between capital and labor, or between individualism and collectivism. Perhaps the ever-increasing centralization which he so strongly opposes, is an essential part of our institutions which he does not wish to destroy.

Mr. Donald Richberg, in his essay, "The Industrial Liberalism of Mr. Justice Brandeis," takes up Mr. Lerner's challenge, and asks: "Will Justice Brandeis be time-justified in his persistent protest against 'bigness' or is bigness the product of an irresistible force, which, if now misdirected, should be harnessed and wisely directed in the service of mankind?" Is his opposition to monopoly reactionary or progressive? Such a question is most timely in view of the many plans for regulated monopoly which are offered as a cure for the depression, and a preventative of future economic crisis.

Mr. Richberg wonders if Mr. Justice Brandeis realizes that individual courage, the secret of liberty, is absent from most workers and business men. Mr. Richberg concludes that his mature mind must realize this and that perhaps eventually Mr. Justice Brandeis' ideas will triumph. Our top-heavy, all-powerful organizations may fall of their own weight through lack of ability to administer them. Decentralization may progress, and more courageous future generations may follow Brandeis' ideals.

Mr. Frankfurter's "Mr. Justice Brandeis and the Constitution" gives us a well-edited selection of excerpts from Mr. Justice Brandeis' opinions, illustrating his views on various questions of constitutional law. The comments of Mr. Frankfurter are concise and illuminating. Emphasis is put on the opinion that in the absence of justices as well-equipped as awake to problems and as open-minded to facts as Mr. Justice Brandeis, the veto power of the Supreme Court is a dangerous, irresponsible, destructive and centralization of power.

"Mr. Justice Brandeis and the Regulation of Railroads," the fifth essay, by Henry Wolfe Bikle, a leading railroad lawyer, shows how well Mr. Justice Brandeis' prejudicial work fitted him for the decision of railroad questions and the prominent part he has placed in the development of that important branch of our law.

The last essay, "The Jurist's Art," by Walton H. Hamilton, is fascinating to the lawyer, and cannot but be interesting to the layman. Should the reader have noticed the absence of an essay like that of Mr. Justice (then Chief Judge) Cardozo in "Mr. Justice Holmes," also edited by Mr. Frankfurter, where Holmes' style is extolled, this deficiency is explained by Mr. Hamilton. Conversationally, and in his early opinions, Mr. Justice Brandeis has a literary style comparable to that of Mr. Justice Holmes. He deliberately abandoned this for a clear, simple style, eschewing color or rhetoric, believing facts and ideas clearly communicated speak for themselves.

His skillful use of extra-legal material in his opinions, obscures the fact that he is, according to Mr. Hamilton, the best technical lawyer on the bench. Employing all the tricks of the law to put his ideas in a form acceptable to his colleagues and consonant with precedent, he regards legal technique as an instrument, and constitutional doctrines "which must be given weights from the stuff of life before a balance can be struck." His dissenting opinions are clear but elaborate super-briefs. Their effect is shown by the increasing frequency with which the court adopts as its own the ideas of past dissents of Mr. Justice Brandeis, and the remarkable rejection by the Senate of a nominee to the court because, sitting on a lower bench, he did not follow one of Mr. Justice Brandeis' dissents.

Lost in this discussion of Mr. Justice Brandeis' ideas and methods, the reader should regard him as a super-human personification of judicial liberalism, we are reminded that he is a man. Mr. Bikle tells of being encouraged when arguing before the court by Mr. Justice Brandeis' "apparently unconscious nods of comprehension." Mr. Chief Justice Hughes informs us that "Mr. Justice Brandeis is fortunate in the possession of an equable temperament which gives him poise and serenity in every investigation and discussion and makes him a delightful associate." Oliver Wendell Holmes, in his charming introduction, tells of his half-century friendship with Mr. Justice Brandeis, and relates how he would say to his wife, as Mr. Justice Brandeis left his home: "There goes a really good man." Mr. Holmes continues: "I think the world now would agree with me in adding 'and a great judge.'"

JEWS BREATHE MORE FREELY AS NAZIS LOSE MAJORITY

mer Chancellor Bruening gained 76 seats, an increase of eight votes, while their allies in Bavaria, the Bavarian People's Party, received 19 mandates, as it did in 1930.

The Communist Party, polling 5,277,000 votes, gained 88 seats, an increase of eleven over its representation in 1930. This is the largest Communist representation in the history of the German Reichstag.

Adolph Hitler's party vote exceeded the vote received by Hitler during his presidential candidacy by 300,000.

The strategic position remains in the hands of the Catholic Center Party of former Chancellor Heinrich Bruening, inasmuch as Hitler cannot hope to control the Reichstag not even if he makes an alliance with the Communists and that is considered as a virtual impossibility, since the Communists have not in the past allied themselves with any other group. Should the Nazis combine with the Nationalists and the Center Party, they could easily control the Reichstag. Whether or not Dr. Bruening's party will choose an alliance with the anti-Semitic parties is not yet known.

The Jewish population anxiously watched the returns of the elections, which were broadcast. It is hoped a month of respite will now ensue since the new Reichstag will not convene before the end of August in all probability.

FALSE COLORS

By NINA KAYE

If you've ever been lonesome in the country, you'll understand how Betty Brenner felt. The week-end crowd had come up to the camp and the air was alive with laughter. The moon hung painted in the summer sky and the water sparkled with the myriad stars it reflected. The music of Hal Haliday's orchestra was crooning, beckoning and couples moved across the glistening floor or went to sit on the veranda, together in the summer darkness.

But Betty did neither of those things. Because she couldn't bear to sit on the edge of the glistening floor, with a smile frozen on her face, trying to look as if she were enjoying herself, and because she couldn't sit alone on benches that were made for two, she crept away to the dressing room.

There wasn't anyone there and Betty went to the long mirror and faced the slim girl in white lace that she saw there. "There's not a thing wrong with my dress," she murmured. "It's just as pretty as anyone else's. I'm not a raving beauty, but I'm not exactly ugly either. But why, oh, why, do they leave me in the corner, when there aren't enough girls to go around?"

The girl in the mirror didn't seem to have an answer for Betty. She turned forlornly away as the door opened, admitting a sudden burst of sound.

Harriet Felman, her nose sadly in need of powder, dashed into the room.

"Whew," she breathed, "I had to slip away to get my breath; I didn't intend to enter a dance marathon when I came to this camp. Why, Betty, I didn't see you. Why so sad and wan, fair maiden?"

Betty stood watching Harriet as she deftly powdered her nose. What was there about her that made her one of the most popular girls in camp? She wasn't even pretty, but Betty had seen her all evening, in her bright green dress, being passed from the arms of one man to another. They hardly let her dance two steps, before someone else cut in on her.

Betty clenched her hands, drew in her breath and asked boldly, "Harriet! Why can't I be popular like you?"

Harriet swirled from the dressing table. "My dear," she said, "the only thing in life you get for nothing—is nothing. If you want to have a good time, you've got to give a good time. You've got to be a good-time girl if you want to be popular with those good-time boys."

"But, Harriet," she asked, "how do they know I'm not a good-time girl? They won't even give me a chance! Nobody ever asks me to dance!"

Harriet spun Betty back before the mirror. "See," she explained, "you look like little Miss Prim herself. White lace! Like driven snow! A man's afraid to dance with you because you might give him a lecture. Men don't want lectures, they want raptures. They want a kiss, not a smack."

In a moment she had whipped out her lipstick and smeared it across Betty's mouth. It was carmine lipstick, the kind that goes with red hair. It made Betty's mouth too bright, too lush. "There!" Harriet exclaimed, "one look at you and there won't be a man out there that won't be dying to kiss you!"

Betty blushed. "What if — they should?"

"Kiss 'im back dumb bunny. Come on out, now. Remember, act gay, look as if you're having the time of your life! Don't be afraid to laugh!"

She dragged Betty through the door before she had a chance to wipe the scarlet smudge from her mouth.

They were hardly on the floor, when a crowd swooped down upon them from the stag line.

"My dance, my dance," they called to Harriet. One of them grabbed her and she danced away in his arms, her head thrown back, a laugh on her lips.

Someone else drew Betty into his arms and they were out on the dance floor. Betty threw her head back as Harriet had done, forced a laugh to her lips. Then she looked into her partner's face and something queer ran down her spine and made her ashamed of the scarlet mouth, the empty, provocative laugh.

"I hope you won't think I'm discourteous," he said. "I just drove up to camp. They told me you don't need any introductions here, just to wait in the stag line and cut in. It does seem rather abrupt."

A desperate desire to make him like her came over Betty. No one had ever liked her when she had been her own shy self. Men always left her after the first dance and crowded around girls like Harriet. "Weren't you lucky," she laughed, "to draw me the very first?"

He blushed. "Well, the truth is, I thought I'd better tell you, before anyone saw it, that your lipstick is all smeared."

For a moment Betty was mortified. But she had made up her mind she wasn't going to be the shy, sensitive, lonely girl she had always been. "How careless of me," she said lightly. "Every time I go out on the veranda, I've got to remember to fix my face all over again."

Betty wasn't sure, but it seemed to her he stiffened. Before either of them could say anything, Al Parkow cut in.

"Looking pretty hot tonight, Betty," he said.

Betty said nothing, her eyes following the stranger as he left the floor. "Who was that?" she asked.

"That? Oh, a college professor or something slow like that. I heard his name but I didn't catch it. He sat at my table for dinner and didn't open his mouth. He's a frost. Now don't go getting sweet on him, just when I'm beginning to be interested in you yourself."

Betty wanted to tell him she'd been sitting there all evening without his becoming interested in her. But she said nothing. She knew Al Parkow was the leader of the liveliest bunch in camp. She knew if he'd dance with her a while, others would be cutting in and her vacation would be made.

She was right. Cheeks flushed with excitement, she went willingly from one pair of arms to another. She even grew glib in the small-talk they expected. And later, when she was dancing with Al again, she agreed to his suggestion that they go out to the veranda and cool off.

Just as they stepped out on the veranda, Betty saw the man she had danced with first, leaning against a pillar, the stem of his pipe gripped tightly in his teeth.

"Taking the air all by your lonesome?" she asked. "Solitude is good for the soul, but it's mighty hard on the heart."

He didn't answer, but stared at her as if he'd been hurt.

Betty stumbled after Al, her desire for popularity seeping away. Instead of sitting down on the bench Al had found, she murmured wearily, "I'm tired, I'm going to my bunk," and left him staring blankly after her.

Betty laid her head on the cool pillow. "It's no use," she whispered. "I don't want to be popular with men like Al. Tomorrow I'll be my own self. Perhaps, then—" Until dawn Betty lay awake, dreaming the dreams of a young girl ready to fall in love.

At breakfast, the next morning, Betty's eyes darted swiftly to the table where Al and his crowd sat. One seat yawned like the space left by a newly drawn tooth. All during breakfast, Betty kept her eyes on that chair, but it was empty throughout the meal.

Al Parkow met her at the door, slipped his hand familiarly under her elbow. "What do you know about that college professor? He had the nerve to tell Mack he couldn't stay in a place like this, didn't care for the crowd!"

Betty gasped. "He's gone! You don't mean he's gone!"

Al nodded slowly. "Had an early breakfast. Mack blamed us for sending away a customer. What's a camp for, except to have some fun?"

Betty didn't hear. She turned away and hurried toward her bunk, tears blinding her eyes.

"I sent him away," she cried. "And I could have kept him!"

SPORTING WORLD

NEWS WRITTEN FOR THE JEWISH HERALD BY GEORGE JOEL

JUST LOOSE TALK AND RUMORS

With the Olympic games under way most sport writers find themselves overheavy with copy, but think of the plight of a writer of Jewish sports. He must indulge in detective work and is confronted with problems that would stump even the astute Anthony Abbot. Where, oh, where, are the Jewish Olympic performers? Sol Furth, the hop, skip and jump expert was finally located at his parents' home in Maine and started off for the long trek back to Los Angeles, but even if he gets back there his chances of placing in his event are slight. Besides Sol there will be no Jewish tracksters. Albert Schwartz, the swimmer, is my one bright spot and if he can spurn the water for a place I'll have a column all set.

I never did consider chess as an athletic sport, but I can't pass up the news that one of the best amateur chessers in the U. S. is a Jewish boy from New York named Isaac Kashdan. This 26-year-old young man will be a member of the U. S. Olympic chess team and is in line for honors. Last week in Portland, Oregon, he took on 34 opponents simultaneously and won 31 of the matches. He played the number one board for the U. S. team in the matches played at Prague some weeks ago. Among the experts Kashdan is considered one of the first ten U. S. players. As long as I am talking about chess there is no reason why I should neglect that game of games (for arguments), contract bridge. If the U. S. were to have a team it would be very much Jewish, with Karns, Jacoby and Culbertson in the lineup. The last named has worked out a very romantic background for himself, but from unimpeachable sources comes the word that a few remarks in Yiddish would not be lost on by Ely's prominent ears.

Sometimes an athlete actually writes a book himself. The Alex Morrison Golf Book, which Simon & Schuster issued recently, was really written by that professional and it took him no less than eight long years to get it down on paper to his satisfaction. Morrison, who is not one of us, is unquestionably the best golf teacher in the country today. His Jewish publishers incidentally, don't know the first thing about the game, but have put over the book with a resounding cash register bang.

Louis Grudin, poet, philosopher, prize fighter, artist and advertising man, is putting his physical attributes to use by digging ditches around his farm up in the wild country of Connecticut.

Nathan Agar, who has been called various names, not the least complimentary of which is "The Stormy Petrel of Soccer," has been elected President of the American League for the coming year. Agar, who brought the first Hakoah team over here some years back is a soccer magnate that has played the game himself. He no longer owns his own club. The Brooklyn Wanderers were his last venture. I noticed in the handout from which I so smartly gleaned the aforesaid information, that the professional soccer league matches will start early in September with an eight-club circuit. The All-Star Hakoahs will enter a team.

Of course it's too late now, but the Maccabee Organization missed a grand opportunity to grab themselves off a nice slab of publicity by holding track meets all over the country and sending the winners to the Olympic tryouts.

SOME OF MY PET HATES

Professional baseball managers who keep insisting upon the need of a Jewish star to draw customers through the turnstiles.

Jewish professional prize fighters who capitalize a natural respect for their parents in the papers, but who privately pass the old folks by. You know the kind, they give the old folks a home in the country and mortgage it up to the hilt or the kind who gives mother money and then sues her to get it back.

Those idiotic athletics who wear Jewish insignia on their athletic clothes and then allow said clothes to get so filthy only a rag man would touch them with his stick.

SOME OF MY PET LOVES

Stuffed chicken neck. Athletes who know how to win. Anyone can be a good loser. It's the good winner, the modest victor that is hard to find. (Sounds like a Hearst editorial, but it's so).

CHATTERINGS

Benny Leonard is very hopeful that he will get a chance at Baby Face McLarnin. You will remember that the cherubic faced one is the gentleman who beats Jewish fighters with such regularity. Benny thinks he can take him.

What has happened to that Westchester County Country Club started by three Jewish gentlemen—its object was to be non-sectarian and to prove that Jews and Gentiles could club together happily. I hear that the only applications filed were two Jewish ones.

Three young Jewish boys from the East will be sent to Culver City this month to compete in the National Junior Tennis Championships, Marco Hecht, Johnny Nogrady and Bill Friedman are the trio that has been picked. The boys will not have to pay their own expenses.

Speaking of expenses reminds me of the recent Seabright mess where the club informed the players that their hotel bills would be paid only so long as they stayed in the tourney. The boys revolted, demanding to be supported until the tourney was over and why not? After all the club admission is at the gate. The players receive the valueless trophies. The least a club could do would be to see the boys through. The club brought up the question of amateurism, but they are a trifle late. For years they have been supporting the entry lists throughout the week. Just another example of the sanctimonious hypocrisy of the tennis moguls when they find that the question involved is money.

O. H. C. NEWS

AUTOMOBILE PARTY HELD

Over a dozen machines, full to capacity with Order of Hebraic Comradeship members and friends, motored to Point Judith last Sunday and spent an enjoyable afternoon bathing or basking in the sun. Sam Berditch, our camera man, surprised everybody by taking moving pictures of almost everybody in the party. These pictures will be projected on a screen in the Order of Hebraic Comradeship club rooms at some future date.

Unfortunately the sudden shower caused almost all to get into street clothes earlier than usual, but individual parties motored to indoor resorts in all parts of the state.

MOTOR BOAT PARTY QUOTA FILLED

Owing to the great demand for reservations for the annual motor boat party by members of the club, there will be no room for outsiders as in the past. Thirty members have signified their intentions to go Sunday, Aug. 14, and that is the boat's capacity.

The committee in charge hope to make this affair the best motor boat party ever. A program of field events and prizes for the winners is being arranged. Complete program will be posted next week.

The Speedway Garage, Inc., is owned and operated by Abe H. Goldstein. At Temple Emanu-El, Abe is the "Chief" of the Boy Scouts and an active member of the Temple's Men's Club. Here is the "Speedway Special" for the month of August—Your car will be washed, thoroughly greased and lubricated, springs sprayed, rear end and transmission checked, battery filled, radiator flushed, tires gauged and upholstery cleaned—all for $2. Just drive up and say "Special" to Abe at the "Speedway." The garage is located at 19 Ormsbee avenue right off Smith street above Canal street before the State House.
