

Investigate Reports Woman Murdered By Secret Nazi Group

BUENOS AIRES — An investigation of reports that a Jewish woman whose body was found in a mountain cave last year had been killed by a clandestine Nazi group that suspected her of being an Israeli secret agent in quest of Dr. Josef Mengele, Nazi war criminal with a notorious record of brutality at Auschwitz, was begun last week by the provincial authorities of Rio Negro, according to revelations by the newspaper La Razon.

According to the newspaper, the woman, tentatively identified as 48-year-old Nora Eldoz, was seen at a luxury hotel in San Carlos de Bariloche, a swanky mountain resort, after her arrival in Argentina for the purpose of tracking down the Nazi criminal. Then she was said to have accepted an invitation from a male guest who asked her to join him in an excursion. Later the man was seen returning alone. His companion, he said, had gotten lost. A few days later the woman's body was found in the cave.

La Razon said the woman was killed by a secret Nazi group "formed to protect Nazi war criminals hiding in Argentina." The newspaper described the victim as a survivor of a Nazi concentration camp and as having come to Argentina on a West German passport. Both the West German and Israel embassies have refused to comment on the report.

The victim's credentials, according to the newspaper, identified her as a secretary to an undisclosed embassy in West Germany and one of the papers found on her was a document signed by President Frondizi authorizing her to travel freely throughout Argentina. This, however, has been denied by the President's press officer.

Jews Proud Of Their Orthodox Synagogue

LENINGRAD — In a special report to the New York Times, Seymour Topping writes of the subtle Soviet campaign against religion here. In discussing the 20 churches he says of the Jews:

"The Jewish religious community is proud of its orthodox synagogue, a handsome Moorish-styled structure built in 1876. "It is larger than any synagogue in Europe and bigger than those in America," said Mikhail Freidman, vice president of the community. The synagogue seats about 4,000 people. There are sixteen small Jewish prayer houses in various parts of the city.

Many Jewish youngsters have fled their faith, seeking integration in Soviet society and the broader opportunities it offers. At the age of 16, when Soviet citizens are issued their internal passports, Jewish youngsters have the option of entering their nationality as Jew or that of the republic in which they live.

However, the contention is that there is more discrimination in the United States than in Russia.

U. S. To Give Airport To Saudi Arabia

WASHINGTON — Despite the unilateral cancellation by Saudi Arabia of the lease for the United States Air Force base at Dhahran, the United States will finish and hand over to Saudi Arabia a modern $5,000,000 airline terminal.

Construction of the terminal, which is now 70 percent finished, was part of the agreement by which the United States obtained use of the air base at Dhahran during the past five years. Saudi Arabia notified Washington that the lease would not be renewed and that military operations must be terminated by Apr. 1, 1962.

Joseph Reap, State Department press officer, said that completion of the terminal "was part of the 1957 agreement, and we will live up to it." The air-conditioned terminal will be completed before the U. S. Air Force leaves Saudi Arabia next year by request.

The Saudi cancellation of the Dhahran Air Base agreement was meanwhile the subject of further critical discussion in Washington, where U. S. officials saw in the cancellation no possibility to save face, following the previous Administration's extreme compromises in principle to negotiate with the Arabs for retention of the base. America's living up to the agreement by completing the airport was seen as "the only thing to do."

NO IMMUNITY

TEL AVIV Former Nazis coming to Israel to testify at the forthcoming trial of Nazi butcher Adolf Eichmann will not be given immunity from arrest and prosecution.

This assurance was given last week by Minister of Justice Pinhas Rosen.

The Minister of Justice, denying that such a request had been made, told Knesset that the Government will not grant immunity to defense witnesses with a Nazi past and that if such witnesses come to Israel they may find themselves thrown into jail.

Isadore Paisner, secretary-treasurer of the Brier Manufacturing Company, heads the slate of nominees for new officers and trustees of Miriam Hospital to be submitted for action by the members of the hospital corporation at the annual meeting on Sunday night, at the Colony Motor Hotel in Edgewood. Mr. Paisner has been nominated for the presidency of the board of Miriam Hospital.

Joslin who is president of the Women's Association of the hospital, Alfred H. Joslin, Sol Koffler, Edwin B. Weinstein, Mark Weisberg and Max Winograd.

The slate of nominees has been certified by the nominating committee under the chairmanship of Edmund Wexler and including among its other members Alter Boyman, Samuel Friedman, Daniel Jacobs, Mrs. Alfred H. Joslin, Joseph K. Levy and Joseph W. Ress.

ISADORE PAISNER

A report from Robert A. Reisman, chairman of the Annual Meeting Committee, indicates that reservations for the dinner on Sunday evening are coming in rapidly and he urged all who intend to be present at the champagne hour and dinner starting at 6 P.M. Sunday, preceding the business meeting, to call the hospital immediately if they have not already sent in their reservation cards and reimbursements.

He said that those who cannot attend the dinner are invited to participate in the business meeting which is scheduled to start at 8:30 P.M.

In addition to the election and installation of officers, a feature of the April 9 event will be the presentation of plans for a major construction project at Miriam Hospital to increase the capacity for patients and enlarge substantially all the diagnostic, therapeutic and administrative facilities of the hospital.

Dr. Glidden L. Brooks, director of the Institute for Health Sciences at Brown University, will also give a major address at the Miriam Hospital annual meeting.

New Cabinet Attempt Fails Again

JERUSALEM — Another fruitless attempt was made last week to form a new Cabinet without general elections now tentatively set for August.

At the suggestion of Foreign Minister Golda Meir, of Mapai, the Transport Minister Yitzhak Ben Aharon of Achdut Avodah, met with Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion. At the meeting, the question of forming a new narrow coalition "of Mapai and the two left-wing parties — Achdut Avodah and Mapam — was again raised."

The meeting broke up when Mr. Ben-Gurion reiterated he would not serve in a coalition with the two parties which had been most hostile in rejecting him as a candidate to succeed himself as Prime Minister. Mr. Ben-Gurion said he would not serve even as Defense Minister in a coalition with the two left wing-parties.

He added that as long as Mapai and Achdut Avodah continued their refusal to retract their charges against him — which developed from his successful fight to force Pinhas Lavon out of his post as Histadrut secretary-general — the Eshkol-headed Cabinet offer was open only to the Progressive party and the National Religious party.

AJC Endorses Aid To Public Schools, Not To Parochial

WASHINGTON — The American Jewish Committee submitted testimony last week to both houses of Congress endorsing President Kennedy's proposal for Federal aid to public schools but insisting that such aid should be denied to parochial schools whether Jewish Catholic or Protestant.

Stressing the Constitutional tradition of separation of Church and State, the American Jewish Committee urged that Federal funds should not be made available to parochial schools either as grants or loans. The testimony was signed by Herbert B. Ehrmann, president of the organization.

The American Jewish Committee said that the crisis in education must be met "within the framework of sound, public policy adopted over 170 years ago, namely, that the institutions of Church and State shall be kept forever separate and distinct in the United States."

"It is neither discriminatory nor unjust to ask parents who voluntarily elect to send their children to private schools because they prefer the type of education given at such institutions over that offered in the public school, to pay the entire cost of such private school education." Mr. Ehrmann said in the testimony. "Indeed we would consider it unfair and discriminatory to ask the general taxpayer to foot the bill in whole or in part for such private school education.

This view, he pointed out, is not to be "interpreted as hostility" to private and parochial schools. He recalled that in 1925 the American Jewish Committee had "defended the rights of parents to send their children to parochial schools to receive the type of education that such parents deemed best for their children."

Reaffirming its long maintained position that "public funds should be used for public education and must not be used either directly or indirectly to support non-public elementary or secondary schools," the AJC statement noted that the Committee still holds fast to this principle "notwithstanding the very rapid growth of all-day Jewish parochial schools which, at present, have an attendance of about 45,000 children."

NAZI NEST

SAN FRANCISCO — Existence of a neo-Nazi movement in San Quentin prison of prisoners calling themselves "Blue Birds" was uncovered last week by prison officials who said the leaders of the group were placed in isolation so as to facilitate breaking up of the movement.

Led by a young burglar with a long and consistent record of violation of prison rules the group professed admiration for Hitler and expressed its purpose by scrawling swastikas on prison walls.

Symposium Shows Contrast Of 1930's To Modern Judaism

"Have you ever considered the possibility that your children may convert to another religion?" — this and six other inquires in a questionnaire is currently the subject of a fifty page symposium, "Jewishness and the Younger Intellectuals", in the April issue of Commentary Magazine.

Each of the thirty-five participants, who represent a wide cross-section of intellectual life, responded to the following:

1. Do you feel that the situation of the Jew in America has altered in the past fifteen years? If so, has this had any influence on your present attitude toward your own Jewishness?
2. What are your feelings, if any, about the generation of Jewish intellectuals whose socialism provided the basis for their more or less antagonistic relation to the Jewish community in America and elsewhere? Do you believe there are viable elements in the tradition they represented?
3. Do you think that your experience as a Jew is importantly relevant to your experience as an American? Do you feel that Jewish culture — in the broadest sense of the term — exerts a significant influence upon American life? If so, how would you define this influence?

4. Considering that you are at least partly a product of Jewish tradition, do you feel any obligation — any sense of historical reverence — to that tradition? Does this obligation include an involvement in the Jewish community, or extend to transmitting the values inherent in Jewish tradition to your children? Or do you perhaps see no merit in the claim that the Jewish people have created or preserved certain special values?

5. Have you ever considered the possibility that your children may convert to another religion? If so, how do you feel about this possibility?

6. Do you feel any special connection with the State of Israel? Does it, in your opinion, exert a legitimate claim on your sympathies? Would you say that it embodies the values of Jewish tradition more clearly than the American Jewish community does?

In an introduction to the symposium, Norman Podhoretz, editor of Commentary, stresses the "idealism that permeates the symposium." Most of the contributors believe that anyone who fights for the ideal of universal justice and brotherhood is to that degree more Jewish than a man who sees his obligation to Judaism as merely the observance of ritual or identification with the Jewish community.

As to the purpose of the symposium, Mr. Podhoretz states that editors of Commentary considered it important to know how the generation of Jewish intellectuals who came to maturity in the late 1940's and the 1950's felt about their "relation to the Jewish heritage and the community which is committed to serving and extending that heritage." Mr. Podhoretz characterizes this atmosphere as "contrasting very sharply with that of the 1930's." He adds:

"Radicalism and rebellion were probably less fashionable among the young than ever before in modern history . . . the State of Israel was in existence and the Jews in America had arrived. Discrimination had declined sharply; and the somewhat premature claim that Jews had become full participants in the cultural life of the country, was now finally and wholly true. Jews were active and prominent in every sphere of activity in America, including the arts."

TO TEACH CRIMES

CHICAGO — A proposal that schoolchildren should be taught a full understanding of the Nazi era and its crimes was approved by the Chicago region of the Illinois Congress of Parents and Teachers after a debate as to the advisability of exposing children to such knowledge.

The recommendation was made after one Chicago school PTA reported that there was a lack of knowledge among "our children of both the significance of America's struggle against the Nazi swastika and the ideology for which it stood." The study also found that the children lacked understanding "of the positive contribution to culture and progress made by various ethnic groups."

The region also noted that the texts picked by the Board of Education for public schools varied widely in detail and accuracy in material on the Nazi era.

Go After the Kind of People You Want in Your Store

BUSINESS is a battle. And the master of business is the man who thinks—plans—directs the fight with the cool and calculating eye of an experienced general. Competition is daily becoming keener in every line of trade. Scientific methods are demanded in every department of business. And all commercial organizations lead to definite and centralized effort.

In no other feature of modern business is the expediency of concentration so universally emphasized as in the advertising end. Topsy-turvy publicity will quickly eat up the profits. In order to create a demand for an article through newspaper advertising you must first formulate a specific proposition for the right people.

This accomplished, you next seek an economical and efficient vehicle of publicity for the marketing of your goods. The selection of your medium should be made with regard to the character of the merchandise you are offering. If you are engaged in distributing goods of the better grade, you know that your logical field of sale is that of the substantial, prosperous class of people—the folks who can appreciate and afford your wares.

Your problem is to reach possible buyers —and no others.

Maximum results at minimum cost — that's The Herald's claim on your advertising appropriation.

Center's Day Camp Open For Enrollment

The opening of enrollments for the Jewish Community Center's 1961 summer day camp season was announced this week by Joseph Gladstone, chairman of the Center's Camping Committee.

Monday, will be the opening date for the Center's 1961 summer season at all three of its day camps, "Camp Jaycee", "Camp Centerland", and "Camp Adventure."

Enrollment in the Center's junior day camp, "Camp Jaycee" is open to boys and girls who will be entering kindergarten or first grade in the fall of 1961.

The group is limited to a maximum of 35 registrations.

"Camp Centerland", is open to boys and girls from second grade through eleven years.

For teen agers, aged 12 and 13 years, "Camp Adventure" offers a senior day camping program with a maximum enrollment of 35 boys and girls.

All three Center day camps have been accredited by the Standards Committee of the American Camping Association.

Daily transportation to the camps is provided by school buses, which operate throughout Providence, Pawtucket, and Cranston. Registrations are also being accepted from Warwick and West Warwick applicants, but only on a provisional basis.

The camps operate five days each week during the camp season, from Mondays through Fridays. The camp day runs from 10 A. M. to 4 P.M. at the camp sites. Enrollments will be accepted for either or both of two 4-week periods. The first period will extend from July 3 through July 28.

The second period extends from July 31 through August 25.

Some sixty persons are included on the Center's camp staff, headed by Matthew Millman, camp director. A full time registered nurse is present at the camp dispensary throughout each camp day and medical consultation is rendered to the camps by several of the community's pediatricians.

The entire camp program is supervised by Arthur Eisenstein, director of the Center's South Side ranch building. The camp waterfront program is conducted under American Red Cross regulations and direction.

Requests for camp registration forms and camp information may be addressed to either the Center's East Side or South Side buildings.

Mr. Gladstone, committee chairman, has announced that all camp registrants must include on their Health Examination Form evidence of a 1961 polio booster inoculation.

Electronic 'Eyes' For The Blind Sought By Israeli Scientist

HAIFA, Israel — A noted Israeli physicist and electronics engineer has forecast that electronic devices will soon bring light to the blind and hearing to the deaf.

Prof. Franz Ollendorf of the Israel Institute of Technology here said that blind persons would carry photoelectric cells and the deaf would be equipped with microphones that would by-pass dead eyes and ears and transmit sight and hearing directly to the brain by an electrochemical action.

He warned, however, that he had no hope of affording full vision to the blind. He will be satisfied to enable them to distinguish between light and dark. "A blind person will be able to see something coming against him," he said in an interview, "but he will not know whether its a car or a human being. He will not be able to distinguish shapes. That will require further development over a long period."

The scientist said he expected better results in restoring hearing to the deaf but the sounds that will register on the brain through the electronic device might not be the same as those in normal hearing. The deaf will have to learn to interpret the new sounds.

Is International Authority
 Professor Ollendorf is not a science fiction writer but a research professor of electrical engineering. The 61-year-old German-born scientist has been awarded the Israel Prize for Exact Sciences in recognition of his research in the field of potential theory. He has also received the Tel Aviv Municipality's Weizmann Prize for research into electrophysiology. He is international vice president of the Institute of Radio Engineers in the United States.

He explained that vision was normally caused by the effect of rays of light upon cells in the retina, containing a concentration of ions. The rays perturb the ions, which send small electric impulses to the brain where they register sight.

Hearing, he went on, is caused by a similar process that results when sound is impressed upon cells in the inner ear.

Professor Ollendorf said that he had ascertained, mathematically, what happened in terms of theoretical physics when light entered the retina and sound the inner ear.

Dr. A. Zariuk, an otolaryngologist in Haifa and director of a school for the blind, has assisted him in the medical and physiological aspects, he said.

The photoelectric cells that blind persons will carry will be the same as those that convert natural pictures into electric impulses in television cameras, Professor Ollendorf said. The microphones for the deaf will be ordinary ones that change sound waves into vibrations of electric current similar to the vibrations in the air.

Moshe Novomeysky 88, Dies In Paris

NEW YORK — Moshe A. Novomeysky, who tapped the mineral riches of the Dead Sea after many years of research, died March 31, in Paris. He was 88 years old.

Mr. Novomeysky was head of the Dead Sea Works, Ltd., which extracts more than 100,000 tons a year of potash and other minerals from the Dead Sea's heavily impregnated waters.

Born in Barguzin, Siberia, Mr. Novomeysky studied in Russia and in Germany before going to Palestine. There, in 1911, he began the surveys and experiments that turned the waters into an asset.

Others had recognized the potential wealth of the Dead Sea, but it was Mr. Novomesky who made the detailed surveys and worked out the practical questions of exploiting them.

With the support of Israel B. Brody of New York, he raised 400,000 pounds to start the Palestine Potash Company, with its extraction plant on the shores of the Dead Sea.

Mr. Novomeysky is survived by his widow, Bertha, who was with him in Paris. Their home is at Gadera, south of Tel Aviv.

Ask Ban On Israel Parade

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. — Jordan asked recently that the Security Council take measures to halt an Israel independence day parade scheduled for April 20 in Jerusalem.

Abdul Monem Rifa'i, Jordan's chief representative at the United Nations, said the Security Council probably would meet Wednesday or Thursday. He indicated that the meeting would be called at his request by T. B. Subasinghe of Ceylon, this month's Council President.

Mr. Rifa'i said the parade would exhibit Israeli armament and military equipment in violation of the general armistice agreement. He said he would ask the eleven-nation body to "issue orders to make it stop."

The Jordanian representative said the parade had been scheduled "in spite of the fact that a rehearsal was condemned March 20 by the Israeli-Jordan Mixed Armistice Commission." He called the display of arms a "military provocation."

The Jordanian complaint was contained in a memorandum submitted to the United Nations. In addition, Mr. Subasinghe conferred with Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold during the day. A United Nations official said the conference probably dealt with the Jordanian matter.

Recent dispatches from Jerusalem have said the Israeli parade rehearsal, which took place March 16, contained British, French and United States-made tanks, two self-propelled guns and an anti-aircraft gun.

An Israeli army officer said later that his Government had notified the Mixed Armistice Commission that Israeli intended to bring equipment into the divided city again for the parade, which will mark Israel's thirteenth year of independence.

Mr. Rifa'i said the Israeli parade in 1959 had been "minimized" after the Secretary General had "intervened." He said Mr. Hammarskjold had negotiated with Israeli officials here.

The Jordanian, in a note to the Security Council president, said the Israeli parade rehearsal was a violation of the armistice agreement and "an act of military provocation which threatens international peace and security."

Jerusalem has been a divided city since 1949. Under an agreement between Israel and Jordan, only "defense forces" are allowed in the city. These prohibit the use of tanks and similar armor.

ONE MAN'S OPINION

YOUNG PEOPLE

by Beryl Segal

Two opposing views are now dominant in the Jewish world with regards to the future of Jewish youth in this land. Some see it turn away from its Jewishness and from its responsibilities, while others have a vision of a youth whose ties to its people and to its aspirations will become stronger than ever.

Two opposing views. Who is right?

Those that see the rosy picture of Jewish youth in this country argue that the days are gone when being a Jew was considered a stigma. He can attain the highest position if qualified. Look at Goldberg. Look at Ribikoff. Look at the hundreds of professors at colleges. Look at the people in the Army and Navy.

So the Jewish young man has no reason to hide his origin, nor does he have a reason to run away from it.

Now with the creation of the Freedom Corps, those people say, the way is open for Jewish young men to go to Israel, to work there, and no one will raise any questions about double loyalties. Some young people of the Freedom Corps will go to Africa, some to Asia, why can't some go to Israel? They are all serving their country.

Those who go to Israel will do all the things that President Kennedy wants them to do in these countries. They will learn to speak the language of the country. They will eat the food of the country. They will live in their homes, and work with them. What better way of bringing the Jewish youth under the spiritual influences of all that is Jewish? Ben-Gurion could not wish for anything better than that. Here is a youth selected for him by the American Government, transported free by the American Government, and paid for their upkeep in health and in sickness.

I quote from the writings of one of the enthusiastic supporters of this plan:

"If we talk about building a bridge between American Jews and Israel, these young people will be the builders of the bridge. It is inconceivable that the years of their stay in Israel, as members of the American Freedom Corps, will not make any impression on these young people. They will return to America better Jews than they were when they left. They will have a better understanding of Jewish values, they will acquire a better knowledge of Jewishness, and they will come away with a feeling for Israel, and will be ready to help her in all her needs for the rest of their life. They will bring the new blood that Jews in America need."

The daily contact with Israel will be the best answer to the question of "why am I a Jew?" It is a question that cannot be answered on short notice. The person who knows the answer is helpless when asked. You must feel it to know. The young people of the American Freedom Corps will find the answer for themselves. They will come back enriched with Jewish learning and understanding. They will never be the same after their experience in Israel.

Isn't that reason for hope and belief in a bright future for American youth?

There certainly is, answer those who view American Jewish life with hope.

The other opinion, the bitter opinion, the one that is not willing to be blinded by illusions, sees a different picture altogether.

The doors of America are opened wide for American Jewish youth. Come and have a choice, if you are capable. Offices in the Government in Washington, and offices in the foreign services are available to Jewish young people. The wide world of American possibilities beckon the Jewish youth as they beckon the college youth in general.

Is there any reason why a Jewish young man or woman should now choose a profession or a job in a Jewish institution? Why they should now choose to teach in Jewish schools? Why they should create in the Jewish world?

As for the Freedom Corps, those people will tell you, the joy is premature. The entire Freedom Corps will consist of one or two thousand people. Of these perhaps a hundred, or two hundred at most, will be Jewish. Even if all the Jews were willing to go to Israel, there is no reason to believe that they will be sent there. Remember that the Freedom Corps is for the underdeveloped countries only. Israel might not qualify. Israel needs no teachers. Israel needs no medical aids. Israel has all the engineers and technicians she needs.

No, we cannot wait for the American Freedom Corps to help us here. We need a spark that will kindle the hearts of American Jewish youth here in this country. We cannot sit with folded hands and hope for help to come from across the ocean, in the form of a few who will return from service in the Freedom Corps.

In the meantime, they see Jewish youth on the highroads of American political and social life. Who will turn them towards the narrow path of Jewish life again?

And the arguments are hurled back and forth between the two opposing views, and the youth is being weighed and measured and found either promising or wanting.

And the youth itself? Youth is silent, and no one will ever know what youth thinks, or hopes, or aspires.

WORTH

SAVE ON TAXES

(In Cooperation With The Research Institute Of America)

The hundreds of thousands of us who help support our parents will find a new and most worthwhile tax break on the income tax return we're filing in the next few weeks.

The break arises from the fact that in 1960, Congress liberalized the rules on medical expenses for the benefit of taxpayers who pay the medical bills of their parents aged 65 or over. Here's how it works.

Ordinarily if you and your wife are under 65, you must first reduce your actual medical expenses by 3 per cent of your adjusted gross income in order to get the amount of your deductible medical expenses. For instance, say you and your wife--both aged 45--file a joint return for 1960 showing $8,000 of adjusted gross income (on line 6 of Form 1040W or line 11 of Form 1040). You actually paid $300 of doctor and dentist bills during the year for yourself, your wife and your 68-year-old dependent mother. Under the 3 per cent rule, you would have had to reduce your actual expenses by 3 per cent of $8,000 or $240, to get your deductible medical expenses--leaving only $60 as your tax deduction.

But beginning with the 1960 return you're filing now, you get special tax consideration for the bills you paid on your 68-year-old dependent mother's account. You deduct these without cutting them by 3 per cent. Thus, in the above illustration, if $200 of your $300 medical expenses were for your mother, you can deduct the whole $200. You are not limited to a total of $60, as you would have been before the law change.

To be sure you do not miss out on the expanded medical expense deduction, check these points when you prepare your return:

Did you pay the medical expenses of your parents, or your wife's parents if you file a joint return with her?

If you did pay them, was this parent (or were these parents) 65 years old or older?

If so, did you contribute more than half of that parent's support (even if you don't claim the parent as a dependent because his or her gross income is $600 or more)? Or equally good, are you claiming the parent as a dependent under a multiple support agreement?

If the answer to all these questions is yes, you won't have to give up a single dollar of medical deduction for that parent under the 3 per cent rule.

But keep these other aspects in mind.

There is a special wastage rule for drugs and medicines--these are considered medical expenses only to the extent that they exceed 1 per cent of your adjusted gross income, even if you pay them for a parent who is 65 or over. Thus in the above example, you would get no deduction for your first $80 of drug and medicine outlays, even if you spent the money entirely for your 68-year-old dependent mother.

If you and your wife are under 65, then even if you deduct medical expenses without the 3 per cent waste for a 65-year or older parent, all your other medical expenses for yourself, your wife, your children, your parents who are under 65, etc., are still subject to being cut down by the 3 per cent rule.

If either you or your wife is 65 or over, you can deduct the medical expenses for both of you without the 3 per cent wastage, just as you can for a 65 or over parent.

You can't deduct more than a specified amount of medical expenses, whether or not the 3 per cent rule applies. These maximum limits, fixed by law, are fairly generous, though, and won't affect most of us.

Many expenses which qualify as medical expenses are often overlooked by taxpayers--ranging from cab fares traveling to and from a doctor's office to eyeglasses. Check your expenses with care.

If you go to a more healthy place for you for an acceptable medical purpose, there is no question that you may deduct your fare or other traveling expenses back and forth as a medical expense. But can you also take as a medical deduction the cost of your hotel or apartment and meals while there?

A Tax Court which unexpectedly had said in an earlier case that these items of board and lodging could be included in medical expenses, last year had second thoughts about it and decided that under a proper interpretation of the law, board and lodging were not part of medical expense. This issue, though, has been appealed to a higher court which hasn't ruled

JERUSALEM: Adolf Eichmann's place of detention is supposed to be a secret--supposed to be, like Israel's atomic reactor. Every tourist driving through the Negev saw the reactor being built and asked what it was, and invariably the taxi driver gave him the correct answer: "It's an atomic reactor."

A few days ago an enterprising reporter in Texas placed a person-to-person phone call to Eichmann in Israel. The operator put the call through to the prison, where Police Commander Ofer told the caller: "Sorry, but Mr. Eichmann is not in. He's out to dinner." Eichmann didn't hear about this incident, for he's still incommunicado--no radio, no calls, no newspapers,

He sleeps on a wooden bed, under five police blankets. The cell has a table, a chair, a shower, a washroom, a courtyard for exercising and an electric heater which, like the light bulb in the room, is screened so that he can't touch it. On the table are books his lawyer wants him to read--books about the Third Reich--but he reads light novels instead. He's not an intellectual.

Eichmann is a disciplined man, not out of fear but only as a German officer. Every morning he makes his own bed, in orderly, military fashion. He washes his clothes every day. He greets guards by rising and clicking his as yet. So here's how the situation stands.

The Treasury will disallow any deductions you take for board and lodging as medical expenses, and the Tax Court will back it up. Odds are that the higher court decision will agree with them.

While the Tax Court was knocking out meals and lodging as medical expenses, it simultaneously announced a favorable ruling for you if you must take trips to recuperate from a serious illness. The Treasury insists that the cost of a trip can only be justified as a deductible medical expense if the trip is prescribed to alleviate or cure a specific ailment.

But suppose a patient who undergoes a serious operation for a specified ailment is ordered by his doctor to take a trip to a certain area for general purposes of convalescence. In this case, the trip is taken after the operation has rectified the specified ailment, but it is still medically necessary to restore the patient's general well being.

The Treasury disallowed the costs of such a trip, but the Tax Court last year allowed them as a medical expense deduction because they were considered medically necessary by the doctor.

One warning, though. Unless and until the Treasury announces agreement with this decision, its agents probably will continue to knock out deductions for convalescence trips.

Medical expense deductions for trips were widened by the Tax Court in another area in 1960 when the Court held that if a wife had to accompany her husband to enable him to make a trip which was medically necessary for him, her traveling expenses could also be treated as part of her husband's medical expenses.

Another court came up with a liberal view on the expenses of a wife who has to accompany her sick husband. Here the question arose about the husband's business trip, not a medical trip prescribed for his health. The husband's firm wanted him to travel on business, but he was a diabetic who required a qualified companion on any of his trips to care for him if his diabetes kicked up. His wife knew how to do this and he, therefore, took her with him on business trips with the firm paying all trip expenses for both. The court held that the firm could deduct all of the wife's expense as a business expense. And the cost of the wife's trip was not taxable as income to the couple.

In 1960 too, the Treasury gave a tax break to couples who adopt a child and who often must pay the medical expenses of the child. It reversed its position that these bills couldn't be deducted as medical expenses and now generally allows them when the bills are paid directly or through an adopting agency under an agreement made before payment.

Huge numbers of employees are shifted by their firms each year to temporary job assignments at a location away from home. If this includes you, this may mean a big boost in your living expenses if you decide not to take your family along. You must maintain your permanent home and also pay extra costs for your meals and lodging while you're away.

The tax law helps you cut in part by allowing you, the employee, to deduct your living costs while away from home on business. But the Treasury interprets this in a way which bars many employees from getting the deduction. These employees now may turn for aid to an appeals court case which last year overturned the Treasury's interpretation.

Here's the heart of the trouble. The Treasury says to the employee, yes, we'll let you deduct your costs of living away from home on a temporary assignment for your firm. But when we say "temporary," we mean that you know at the start that you will be finished and back at your permanent location within one year.

If your assignment runs for more than a year or if it's indefinite because you don't know when you're transferred exactly how long you will have to be away from your permanent location, the Treasury says it won't consider you're on a temporary assignment and it, therefore, won't allow you to deduct your living costs while away from your family home.

But the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals rejected this view, said that the mere fact that a job assignment to a different location is indefinite should not bar the employee from deducting his living costs there and suggested instead what it believes to be a more sensible test. Specifically:

Is there a reasonable probability, known to you, the employee, that you will be employed at your new assignment for a long period of time?

If there is not this probability, you shouldn't reasonably be expected to move your family, and your own living costs at the new location should be deductible. If there is this probability, you should not get a deduction for living there alone because you could reasonably be expected to move your family home to this new place.

Of course, this is only one of many circuit courts and the Treasury and the Tax Court haven't yet agreed with this liberal theory. If and when the Treasury ever switches to this circuit court's view, employees who couldn't deduct expenses under the present Treasury rule could apply for tax refunds based on taking the deduction.

In fact, if you have been involved in a conflict of this sort, you might want to talk to a professional tax adviser about filing a refund claim now as a protective step.

Another point: The circuit court view does not apply to employees who normally work at different locations for different employers, such as construction workers.

If you're in this category, you still will be unable to deduct your living costs on the job while your family lives elsewhere -- if the job is indefinite or lasts more than a year.

Every day all over the country, men and women get various types of gratuitous payments from business firms which they regard as tax-free gifts and on which they, therefore, don't pay tax.

For these people the Supreme Court had bad news in 1960, for it ruled that, if the payment is made to them by a business firm, this hardly ever can be considered a true, nontaxable gift and, instead, it must be reported as income.

The problem came up before the Supreme Court in the case of a Mr. Duberstein who had turned over a sales lead to a business acquaintance without any requirement that he be paid for it. Because the information proved exceedingly profitable, the business acquaintance voluntarily gave Mr. Duberstein a Cadillac.

Duberstein treated the car as a true gift on which he need pay no tax. He hadn't arranged in any way to be paid for the lead he furnished to his business acquaintance and the firm had no legal or moral obligation to pay him. Duberstein thus claimed that these factors made the payment a true, nontaxable gift.

But the Supreme Court turned thumbs down on this argument. Its reasoning was that if a firm is motivated by business reasons to make a payment, it is income to the person who receives it, even if the business was not legally or morally bound to pay. A true, nontaxable gift, said the court, would be a payment made from a "detached and disinterested generosity. . . out of affection, respect, admiration, charity or like impulses." Duberstein wasn't paid for any of these reasons. He was given the Cadillac because he had furnished a profitable customer lead and, this being a strictly business reason, he therefore had to pay income tax on the automobile.

The same texts will be applied to the many other business payments which are made to persons other than employees -- a fact which is bad news but which you must recognize is the result of the Supreme Court decision in the Duberstein case.

For instance, a lower court already has used the Supreme Court rule to tax wage continuation payments to the widow of a deceased corporation officer. When the officer died, the firm voluntarily decided to make the payments to her "in recognition of the services" of her late husband.

Said the lower court: the money wasn't really a gift geared to the widow's needs or a gift based on the corporation's "affection" for her, or a gift made out of its "generosity". It was a gift tied to a business-like reason -- namely, her husband's past services -- and as such it was taxable.

Roiff — Young
 Leah Young, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morton Young of 21 Westford Road, was married March 19 at Temple Emanuel to Robert Louis Roiff, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Roiff of 107 Pembroke Avenue. A reception was held in Temple Emanuel social hall.

Cantor Jacob Hohenemser officiated at the ceremony.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of peau de soie with scoop neckline outlined in seeded pearls and crystal embroidery with kabuki sleeves. Her dome shaped full length skirt fell from a waistline emphasized by a sash terminated with a bow and streamers in the back. A bouffant butterfly veil was held in place by a rose made of peau de soie and seeded pearls. She carried a cascade of white roses, white swansonia and white orchids.

Miss Natalie Young, cousin of the bride, was maid of honor. Miss Sheila Kay, Miss Joan Dashoff, Miss Irma Schretter and Miss Gretel Tishler were bridesmaids. They each wore gowns of imported silk in azalea pink with modified scoop necklines and short sleeves. They carried a cascade bouquet of white roses and pink staticea.

Retirement Every Year!

THE ALASKA BROWN BEAR is the biggest meat-eating animal in the world, often attaining a height of ten feet when he rears up on his hind legs. Like all bears, the 'brownie' hibernates in winter. Soon after the first snow falls, he finds a cave or a deep shelter under an overhanging ledge of rock. There he curls up and sleeps until spring.

The bear 'retires' for several months every year, sustained by the fat stored in his body. When human beings retire, however, they don't receive the same help from Nature. They turn instead to life insurance. Nothing can make a man's retirement years more financially secure than a portfolio of Sun Life policies tailored to his requirements. Let me tell you how.

Finesse In Finessing

On the bidding, it is worth noting that South was rather good for a mere 1H, but as his partner could not bid over 1C a game in any event did not seem probable. After his partner's free bid South's next bid should have been 2NT; 3NT is, I think, the best game contract on the hand.

In 4H there seem to be four top losers even if the heart finesse is right, but let us follow South's play. East led the queen of diamonds and South took it in his own hand. He now led the ten of hearts. When the king went up South could be reasonably certain that it was bare: no good player would cover the ten with the king in this position if he could help it, for partner could well hold J, x, x, and then the play of the king would lose a trick in the suit.

At the next trick, therefore, South finessed the six of trumps. He then drew the remaining trumps and West had to find three discards: he chose one club, one spade, and eventually the nine of diamonds. South could now read his original holding as ace to four spades, the singleton king of hearts, and the queen, jack of diamonds; his clubs would appear to be five to at least one honour—most likely the king. South therefore led a diamond to dummy's king and then a low club, finessing the jack, which lost to West's king. This was the position at the seventh trick:

West returned a club, on which East's queen fell. Declarer led a small spade, won with dummy's king, and then the nine of clubs, on which he threw his losing small diamond. West was now forced to lead either a small club to dummy's winning eight or ace of spades followed by another spade. In either case declarer gets his tenth trick.

The lead of the ten of trumps at trick two instead of the thoughtless but more obvious play for the queen is the key to developing ten tricks on the hand. Once the singleton king is thus discovered the rest follows inevitably: the trap finally closes on West and the game contract is successfully landed. When taking a finesse from a sequence it is always worth considering whether information or advantage will be obtained by leading the highest of the sequence or the lowest, instead of mechanically picking the first card that comes to hand.

heels. He was a talkative man in the interrogations. He no longer is being interrogated, because he's now dictated 4,000 pages and there's enough evidence.

He not only answered all questions fully, but also asked for paper and pencil, to spend his hours back in the cell writing what he feels is pertinent. The interrogations were held in a bare room containing two tables, two chairs and a tape recorder.

Each interrogation began with Eichmann reciting, in German, into the tape recorder the things he'd written the night before. Then he was handed a transcript of the previous day's interrogation, and the tape would be played back for him so that he could compare it. Whenever he made changes or edited the script, he initialed each alteration and then signed every page.

Tape recordings are not admissible evidence, usually, at trials -- because it is possible to tamper with recordings. But by initialing each change and signing each page of the transcript, Eichmann has made it possible to use the tapes in evidence.

Next to his cell is another room, where he meets with his lawyer or the lawyer's assistant. They sit on opposite sides of a dividing glass wall and converse via special mikes and earphones, so that the ever-present guard can't eavesdrop. Eichmann is never alone in his cell. One guard is there constantly. A peephole enables a second guard to keep the first one under surveillance. And a third guard watches the second one watching the first one watching Eichmann.

A police log is kept of his daily activities. A medical log also is kept, by a doctor who examines him every day. The log shows that Eichmann has been in perfect health except for one day -- when he had a slight headache.

Wire fencing is being erected now to block off the streets in Jerusalem surrounding the Beth Ha'Am (House of the People), where Eichmann will be tried. The building, still unfinished, is made of Jerusalem stone, quarried out of the local hills. Its steps are made of material from Galilee. Someone pasted a poster on the face of the building, "Judges of Eichmann, 6,000,000 Jews Were Killed. Remember Them in Your Judgment." A guard ripped the poster in two.

The courtroom itself, intended for ultimate use as a cultural center, looks like a UN room, with 750 blue-covered seats, recesses for two TV cameras and booths for the four simultaneous-translators -- German, English, French and Hebrew.

Onstage is the bench in front of the chairs for the three judges. The counsel tables are below them. Sawdust and pieces of broken wood still cover the floor, where the workmen are hurrying to finish their job in time. At the left of the stage is the glass-enclosed booth where Eichmann will sit. The lower half is wooden, the rest bullet-proof glass.

Only three sides of the booth are enclosed. The back still is open. It's a foot away from the door through which he'll enter. He'll have earphones and a mike connected to his lawyer's table so that they can confer privately. The bullet-proof glass has been tested, and I noticed a scratch where the bullet hit.

Reporters will be seated downstairs, and the citizenry in the balcony. There'll be a security check on each arrival. At the entrance to the building will be a place where items not needed in the courtroom will be left for deposit. The pressroom downstairs will have a TV screen, teletypes and radios.

Reburial In Israel Of Roman Victims

JERUSALEM, Israeli Sector — Prime Minister Ben-Gurion has announced the remains of scores of Jewish soldiers and their families who died in an anti-Roman rebellion 1,800 years ago will be ceremoniously reburied with all Jewish religious rites.

The skeletons, relatively well preserved in the dry climate of the south Judean desert, were found in caves in which the Jewish rebels, led by Shimon Bar-kochbah, made their last stand after the destruction of Jerusalem.

Ben-Gurion announced the reburial decision while visiting the "caves of the dead" where the remains were found. Reburial will be on a cliff-top above the caves.

In Hollywood . . .

By Barney Glazer

Hollywood, California — Don Fedderson, the producer who is starting a new TV series "Tramp Ship," has selected Elmer Bernstein to score the pilot film. . . Dick Shawn, the night club comedian, is now getting some juicy major motion picture and television roles. Shawn's real name is Richard Schulefand. His mother and father, Ann and Edward, were graduated from the same public school in Buffalo, N. Y.

They were married in the same school — Congregation Ahavas Achim, in Buffalo, where Richard was to be Bar Mitzvahed. Momma Ann remembers: "Richard was always mimicing and also liked to sing. The Cantor always thought he would make a wonderful chazzan."

Continued Mrs. Schulefand: "We always impressed our son with the fact that he is a Jew and to be a good Jew meant to be a good American. When he went into the service, we gave him a silver mezzusah to wear around his neck."

SOPHIE TUCKER always carries her own microphone with her. It isn't vanity. Sophie wants to insure that a strange microphone won't make her sound like Jimmy Durante. . . Our sincere admiration goes out to Bob Greenberg, 17, successful disc jockey over WEAW in Evanston, Illinois. Blind since birth, Bob reads his scripts from Braille. Even though he can't see the studio clock, Greenberg's fabulous sense of timing never lets him run over his scheduled air time.

THEODORE BIKEL'S name as an actor and folk song vocalist is well known in many cities but his potential has not been realized. I predict immortal greatness for this beloved Jewish actor. . . Sylvia Fine, Danny Kaye's versatile wife, is an accomplished pianist and composer. Sylvia wrote the tune "The Moon Is Blue," and also wrote the theme music for the motion picture "The Man with the Golden Arm."

ANDRE PREVIN has been nominated in three divisions of the current Oscar race. What an accomplishment if he wins three Oscars! There's a strong possibility. . . Previn is only 33 years old! . . . Jeff Chandler says that he doesn't want to make movies outside of the U.S. but he is compelled to do so. Jeff says that he'd rather stay home but there aren't enough inducements in Hollywood to keep him busy. On the other hand, producers in other parts of the world are continuously making him generous offers which he can't very well refuse.

NOW COMES word that Harry Belafonte is part Jewish! According to Belafonte, his grandfather was a French Jew. Also, Belafonte boasts: "My wife is Jewish, my son is more than half-Jewish" . . . Sammy Cahn has won three Academy awards for his tunes "All the Way," "Three Coins in the Fountain" and "High Hopes" . . . I have written three letters to Tony Martin asking him to clarify his Jewish background. As I remember, I thought Tony was part Jewish but his close friends advise me he is 100% Jewish. Thus far, Martin has failed to answer my mail and I have it on good authority he received my letters. My next move: next time we meet, I'll put the question directly to him. Until now, he's been cordial but this could change our reporter-actor relationship quite suddenly. Watch for the blow-by-blow report.

ABOLISH EXIT VISAS

JERUSALEM — Moshe Shapira, the Minister of the Interior, announced in the Knesset, Israel's Parliament, that Israeli exit visas will be abolished soon.

He made the announcement in a debate on the budget of his Ministry, explaining he had come to the conclusion that there was no justification for the need to obtain permission to leave under current conditions.

He said that security requirements, involving the control of those eligible for military service to prevent them from departing from Israel, could be met by other means.
