Interracial Community, War's Children 'Educated Childbirth' Concern Blumbergs

By LOIS ATWOOD

In his three years in Providence, Rabbi Herman J. Blumberg has felt a personal and professional need to involve himself in community organizations concerned with problems. He is convinced that Judaism "demands that we speak to the social problems of our community. Firstly as an individual Jew with that impetus and that compulsion, I have to do something, and secondly as a rabbi, I feel it my responsibility to serve as a model for my congregants, of the kind of social involvement they must have, and also to some extent to involve them."

Civil rights, the war in Vietnam and educated childbirth are the issues Rabbi and Mrs. Blumberg are immediately concerned with. He is chairman of the East Side Neighborhood Council and of the Committee of Responsibility to save war-burned and war-injured Vietnamese children, and she is in charge of public relations for the Rhode Island Educational Childbirth Association. He is also on the boards of the East Side Y and the Urban League. . . all this in addition to the heavy load he carries as assistant rabbi of Temple Beth El.

Last month he was one of five clergymen who held an ecumenical service outside the state house in connection with the protest of congressional inaction on anti-poverty funds. He accepted the invitation to participate because he felt a rabbi should be there.

The Committee of Responsibility is a way of expressing one's moral concern for war without becoming involved in political protests, said the rabbi, who became aware of the organization about eight months ago when Mrs. Arthur Haines, who started the local group, came to the temple with a poster.

"I found it the kind of vehicle I needed. . . (to express my) feeling about and concern for war. I feel in part responsible. This is a way of maintaining my integrity as a human being in the face of a war being fought in my name." He spoke on a radio panel program, wrote a letter to the editor, made a contribution, became interested and when Mrs. Haines moved away, became chairman.

The idea germinated in a unit begun by Boston doctors, the Physicians' Committee on Social Responsibility, which decided to bring to this country Vietnamese children who could not be given adequate treatment in their own land. Certain kinds of medical procedures could be better done here, such as prosthesis work and rehabilitative plastic surgery. A reliable estimate predicted that if amputations in Vietnam were to stop now, it would take five years at the present rate of production to fit all who need artificial limbs. . . and amputations cannot stop now.

Some medical procedures simply cannot be carried out for civilians in Vietnam. The medical record for American soldiers is excellent, but figures on civilians indicate that great numbers of them die before reaching a doctor and that medical facilities are in credibly overtaxed.

The Swiss humanitarian organization, Terre des Hommes, which brings children to Europe for medical aid, reported in 1966 that in Vietnamese hospitals "one finds children burned from head to foot who are treated only with vaseline, because of lack of ointment for burns, cotton, gauze and personnel. In places with the atmosphere of slaughter houses for people, where flies circulate freely on children who have been skinned alive, there are no facilities for hygiene, no fans and no air conditioning. . ."

Some children have at last been brought to the United States, but there has been a "terrible holdup," said Rabbi Blumberg. The committee had raised money, but the Vietnamese government put stumbling blocks in the way: 26 administrative procedures must be completed before the government will consider whether it will permit certain children to come. Each step is complicated and difficult to accomplish.

Teams of doctors sent to Vietnam by COR had no trouble picking out children in desperate need of the medical procedures available elsewhere. Those to be helped first are the youngsters whose condition is deteriorating. The Beth El rabbi emphasized that COR does not want to upset or outrage people by publishing the shocking pictures of napalm-burned children, and that they are making every effort not to exploit the children. They do want to publicize the medical problem in Vietnam and how we can help.

About $15,000 has been raised in the Boston area alone (COR is now a national committee), about $2,000 of it by the Providence group which is setting up a speakers' bureau which will address any group. Direct mail solicitation is their other method of arousing interest and, hopefully, funds for this mitzvah. Public meetings in June and October; a benefit at Trinity, more than $400 from the Classical senior class, a meal of reconciliation, part of the proceeds of a Pete Seeger concert, Looking Glass Theatre and Theatre Company of Boston benefits, and gifts from Wheeler School and three youth groups have all testified to public interest. "The Committee of Responsibility is an imaginative idea and catches many groups," said its chairman.

Three children are now in San Francisco and two in Los Angeles, Calif., where a sizable Vietnamese population has been helping with problems of language, food etc. Two others are in Boston. The goal is 15 to 20 per month. The children will be accompanied by a mother or nurse and will stay in foster homes during non-hospital periods. They are transported by the Military Air Transport Service from Vietnam, an arrangement that may not continue. In Boston, COR hasn't yet succeeded in getting a hospital to donate its facilities.

Illinois Congregants Fly To Capital To Lobby Against War In Vietnam

WASHINGTON — It was "a day in the life of Solel," as their rabbi called it, and by and large they were glad they had come although they did not think they had accomplished much if anything.

Forty-six members of Congregation Solel, which means "pathfinders" in Hebrew, flew from Highland Park, Ill., to Washington one day last week to lobby against the war in Vietnam.

They met Senators Charles H. Percy of Illinois; Eugene J. McCarthy of Minnesota; a top aide of Senator J. William Fulbright of Arkansas and Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois, the Republican leader. Only Mr. Dirksen, an out-and-out hawk, showed anger at their arguments and questions. The rest mirrored their worries and bewilderment.

The group, from a wealthy and intellectual congregation in a north Chicago suburb, talked long

De Gaulle's Mideast Approach Lacks Moral Principles, Says Political Rival

NEW YORK — A candidate for the post of President of France said last week that General de Gaulle lacks moral principles and has "purely materialistic views" in his approach to problems in the Middle East. "He weighs the numbers and resources of Arabs and Israelis. He thinks of the oil in Algeria and other Arab countries."

Francois Mitterand, the leader of the non-Communist French left, ran second to General de Gaulle in the 1965 election. The 51-year-old former Resistance member held a seat for many years after World War II in the French Assembly and has held ministerial posts in several governments. He is visiting this country privately, he said, to broaden his knowledge of the United States which he last visited 15 years ago.

In an interview with Paul Hoffman of The New York Times, he emphasized a point about President de Gaulle by picking up a teapot.

"This pot is green" Mr. Mitterand said, "and de Gaulle will start by stating that it's green. You can't dispute that, you can't say it's blue. What's in the pot, tea, coffee or poison, is another matter."

"Now, de Gaulle, he always seizes on a real, existing issue. He must be accepted or refuted seriously. He may dramatize or blow up a problem, you may question his methods, but the problem is there."

As examples, Mr. Mitterand cited General de Gaulle's reiterated demands for "freedom" of French-speaking Canadians and his advocacy of gold, rather than the United States dollar, as the paramount vehicle for international payments.

He also said that President de Gaulle's fascination with gold was "completely antiquated." But he made it clear that as a European he could not be expected to be irrationally fascinated by dollar stability.

Mr. Mitterand said he did not think de Gaulle's recent remarks were anti-Semitic. "It just shows deep ignorance of this state (Israel) and its sociological and political realities," the chairman of the French Federation of the Left suggested. "De Gaulle has only scanty ideas about all this."

The Gaullists, like the French Communists, Mr. Mitterand observed, are backing the Soviet Union's stand in the Middle East, whereas "we Socialists have supported Israel's right to exist and most of her objectives."

Mr. Mitterand, who spoke in precise French without ever groping for an expression, said that the "Socialist family" of groups that make up the Federation of the Left was able to see eye to eye with the French Communists on many domestic issues but disagree with the Communists on fundamental foreign politics positions, as epitomized by the Middle East controversy.

France's Socialists affirmed, Mr. Mitterand said, that Israel has a right to exist, "and she doesn't have the right if she hasn't the means to exist." He advocated Israeli-Arab negotiations and remarked that such talks "certainly cannot be promoted by a blockade of the Gulf of Aqaba or closure of the Suez Canal."

The French leader asserted that Israel could not be expected to give up her territorial conquests without obtaining a "political statute," meaning international guarantees and recognition. He said that direct Israeli-Arab talks would be preferable, although mediation by the United Nations or some United Nations members could help.

Middle East negotiations within the United Nations framework would be a "clumsy" process, Mr. Mitterand said, "but reason must prevail over passions."

Levi Eshkol Proposes Common Market As Solution To Problems Of Mideast

JERUSALEM — A common market for the Middle East was proposed last week by Premier Levi Eshkol as a substitute for the disunion of the area. The Israeli Premier said establishment of a common market is the only way to restore this region, "the cradle of human culture," to its "proper place on the world map," and would replace the present "division, fragmentation and senseless hatred."

Speaking to editors at a luncheon in the Knesset, he also said that there could be no return to the demarcation lines of the 1949 armistice agreements and that of June 4, the day before the Six-Day War began.

In view of continued Arab intransigence and the speech by President Gamel Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic, he said, "It becomes clear with redoubled force that there can be no return to the political, security and territorial situation that tempted the aggressors and stimulated them to act as they did."

In his speech President Nasser reiterated that there must be no recognition of Israel, no negotiations with Israel, no armistice and no "liquidation of the Palestine question." He said Cairo would continue to bar Israeli shipping from the Suez Canal.

Summing up the Israeli Government's policy half a year after the war, Mr. Eshkol said it sought permanent peace through direct negotiations, free passage for Israeli ships through the Suez Canal and the Strait of Tiran as a condition for peace, and agreed and secure borders between Israel and her neighbors.

This last, he said, would open prospects for a regional solution of the refugee problem.

Discussing his common market proposal, the Premier declared that some of the Arab states were afraid of economic competition from Israel, for fear that it would lead to domination in this field. Instead, he suggested, such competition would be natural and healthy and mutually beneficial to the states involved.

He urged opening "a new area of cooperation after 20 years of barren hostility."

Rights Leader Condemns Racist Isolationists

BOSTON — A prominent Negro educator and the president of the American Jewish Congress on Sunday scored black nationalists who seek to eject whites in the struggle for racial justice. They also criticized those Jews who seek to stay aloof from helping Negroes to achieve full equality.

The "Isolationists in both camps" were condemned by Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, a Negro rights leader, who is a professor of psychology at the City University in New York, and Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld of Cleveland, who is president of the congress.

They spoke at a meeting of the national Governing Council of the AJC at the Statler Hotel.

Rabbi Lelyveld disagreed with the view that a coalition of Negro and Jewish middle-classes is paramount in combating anti-white hostility, including anti-Semitism. This position was taken by Bertram H. Gold, executive director of the American Jewish Committee, at its meeting in San Francisco earlier in the week.

Rabbi Lelyveld endorsed instead "an alliance not only with respectable middle class but with those who are just as angry with injustice and inequality as I am."

Author Meyer Levin To Appear At Center On Sunday, Dec. 17

Meyer Levin, American novelist, journalist and playwright, will appear at the Jewish Community Center on Sunday, Dec. 17, at 8 p.m. It was announced this week by William L. Robin, chairman of the Center's adult activities committee. Mr. Levin has been invited to appear as part of the Center's celebration of National Jewish Book Month. His subject for discussion will be "The Jewish Author in American Literature."

Mr. Levin is the author of "Compulsion," "The Old Bunch," "The Fanatic" and an additional half-dozen other novels. His latest novel, "Gore and Igor," with an Israel setting, will be published by Simon and Shuster early in 1968.

A Jewish war correspondent in World War II, Mr. Levin returned to journalism in Israel's recent war, covering the fighting in Sinai, Jerusalem and on the Syrian fronts for the North American Newspaper Alliance.

He made the first feature film of Jewish life in Palestine, "My Father's House," in 1946, and in 1947 the film of the Haganah's underground immigration operation, "The Immigrants."

Mr. Levin is also the author of the first dramatization of "The Diary of Anne Frank," a version which was later suppressed after four performances in Israel.

Members of the committee in charge of the program are Mr. Robin, chairman; Mrs. Phyllis Brown, Norman Robinson, Beryl Segal, Erwin Strasmich and Harry Platt.

Lillian Lazar Fund

The New England Region, Religious Zionists of America, Mizrahi Hapoel-Hamizrachi, announces the establishment of the Lillian Lazar Memorial Scholarship Fund in memory of Mrs. Emanuel Lazar, who died Nov. 29.

Professor William Schwartz, president of the New England Region of Religious Zionists, who made the announcement said the fund will help maintain and educate needy and refugee children in Israel.

Contributions are being received at the regional office of the Religious Zionists of America, 611 Washington Street, Room 405, Boston, Mass., 02111.

Cemetery, West Roxbury, Mass.

Born in Russia in March, 1875, he lived in Providence for the last 15 years and had been a resident of Boston prior to that. He was the proprietor of Sadow's, a women's and children's specialty shop in Natick, Mass., until his retirement four years ago. He was a member of Temple Emanuel, its Men's Club and the Jewish Home for the Aged.

Survivors include two daughters, Mrs. Hayim Mushnick and Miss Ruth Dosick, both of Providence; five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

LOUIS I. SCHNEIDER

Funeral services for Louis I. Schneider, 81, of the Jewish Home for the Aged, who died Sunday after an illness of six months, were held Tuesday at the Max Sugarman Memorial Chapel. Burial was in Lincoln Park Cemetery.

The husband of the late Annie (Shanbrun) Schneider, he was born in Austria on Aug. 31, 1886, a son of the late Marcus and Bela (Lang) Schneider. He had been a resident of Providence for 60 years.

Mr. Schneider was a tailor and for many years operated shops on Plain Street and Eddy Street. In 1945 he joined the Donnelly's of Rhode Island, 790 Broad Street, and was employed until his retirement in 1957.

He was a member of the Rhode Island Jewish Fraternal Association and Congregation Lenas Hazedek.

He is survived by two sons, Bernard of Providence and Milton Schneider of Greensboro, N.C.; two brothers, Sol Schneider of Long Island, N.Y., and Judah Lang of Jerusalem, Israel, and three grandchildren.

LEROY HAFT

Funeral services for Leroy Haft, 50, of 48 Pilgrim Drive, Warwick, an assistant professor of accounting at Rhode Island Junior College, who died Monday after a two-year illness, were held Wednesday at Temple Beth El. Burial was in Congregation Sons of Israel and David Cemetery.

The husband of Ruth (Sanek) Haft, he was born in Providence on Nov. 13, 1917, a son of the late Jacob and Sarah (Levitt) Haft. He had lived in Warwick for 20 years.

He was a member of Temple Beth El, a past president of the Brotherhood, and a member of the executive board of the temple. He was a past master and associate chaplain of Redwood Lodge, F&AM, a 32nd degree Mason, and a member of the Shriners.

He was graduated from Providence College, class of 1937, and received his M.B.A. from New York University in 1939. He was a captain in the United States Army in World War II, serving with a Coast Artillery anti-aircraft unit. He was a committeeman with the Boy Scouts of America, Narragansett Council and a member of the Masonic Youth Commission.

Besides his wife, survivors include a son, James R. Haft of Warwick, a daughter, Miss Maxine S. Haft, and a brother, Jules J. Haft, both of New York City, and a sister, Mrs. Joseph Solinger of Providence.

MAX GOLDSTEIN

Funeral services for Max Goldstein, 82, father of Public Safety Commissioner Harry Goldstein, who died Wednesday are to be held today at the Max Sugarman Memorial Chapel. Burial is to be in Lincoln Park Cemetery.

MRS. EMANUEL LAZAR

Funeral services for Mrs. Lillian Lazar, 56, of 131 Fourth Street, who died in Brooklyn, N.Y., on Nov. 29, were held there, and burial took place at Mount Judah Cemetery, Brooklyn. She was the wife of Rabbi Emanuel Lazar of Congregation Mishkon Tfiloh, and former national president of the Women's Branch, Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America.

Born in Hungary in 1911, she was a daughter of Rabbi and Mrs. Abraham Klein of Providence. She had lived in the United States for 45 years.

Mrs. Lazar was active in many fields of Jewish community service. She served for almost a decade as president of the Shomros Hadas Society of East New York, an organization devoted to Jewish family purity. Before becoming national UOJCA Women's Branch president, she had been editor of its national bulletin, "Newsletter."

She was active in the Sisterhood of Congregation Mishkon Tfiloh, the Providence Chapter, Mizrahi Women, and many local charitable and religious endeavors.

Among the rabbinic leaders who spoke at her funeral services were Rabbi Samuel Ehrenfeld, dean of the Chasan Sofer Rabbinical Seminary in New York City; her son, Rabbi Eli M. Lazar, principal of the Moriah Yeshiva Academy in New Brunswick, N.J.; Rabbi Menashe Klein, dean of Yeshivat Beth Shearim; Rabbi Solomon Reichman, chairman of the Executive Board of the Union of Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada; Rabbi Isaac Shmidman, dean of the Yeshiva Toras Chaim of South Shore.

Rabbi Nissen Telushkin, an authority in Jewish law who had long been associated with Mrs. Lazar in community projects, referred to her as "my partner in constructing and establishing the Mikvah of East New York."

Psalms and memorial prayers were chanted by Rabbi Seymour Nulman of the East Side Torah Center and by Rabbi Louis Nulman, educational consultant to Torah U'Mesorah.

The UOJCA, the Rabbinical Council of America, the Religious Zionists of America, Yeshiva University and Brooklyn High School were among the national organizations represented at services.

She is survived by her parents and husband; two sons, Rabbi Lazar of Hyde Park, N.Y., and David Lazar of Philadelphia, Pa.; two sisters, Mrs. Helen Moyer of Washington, D.C., and Mrs. Anne Covitz of Providence, and four grandchildren.

HARRIS KOPELMAN

Funeral services for Harris Kopelman, 59, of 17 Payton Street, who died unexpectedly on Nov. 30, were held the following day at the Max Sugarman Memorial Chapel. Burial was in Lincoln Park Cemetery.

The son of the late Abraham and Anna (Roy) Kopelman, he was born in Providence on Sept. 3, 1908. He had lived in Providence all his life.

Mr. Kopelman was employed with Brown & Sharpe as a machinist's helper in 1943 and was a member of the local machinists' union. He was a veteran of World War II and served in the U.S. Army Air Force.

Survivors are two brothers, Leo and Charles Kopelman, both of Providence, and a sister, Mrs. George Konisky of Van Nuys, Calif.

JOSEPH SADOW

Funeral services for Joseph Sadow, 92, of 99 Hillside Avenue, who died unexpectedly on Nov. 30, were held the following day at the Max Sugarman Memorial Chapel. Burial was in Mishkon Tfiloh.

Jewish Population Of Italy Declining

ROME - Italy's small Jewish community, which numbers only 33,000 is in danger of demographic extinction as a result of a declining birth rate, migration and the effects of Nazi and Fascist persecution 25 years ago.

This conclusion was drawn from a statistical study by two Italian Jewish graduate students, Sergio Della Pergola and Franco Sabatello. They found that there is a natural decrease of 4.7 per cent among Italian Jewry, compared to an annual increase of 8.7 per cent for the Italian population as a whole. The average age of the Jewish population is 41 years, compared to an average of 34 years for the general population.

During World War II, the Fascist regime and, later, the Nazis deported about 8,300 Italian Jews. About 5,000 Jews abandoned the Jewish community, and a considerable number of Jewish youths emigrated.

The decrease in the Jewish population is especially noticeable in small and medium size communities from which there has been a steady migration to larger cities. The largest Jewish centers in Italy are Rome with 13,000 Jews and Milan which has 8,500.

The study shows that 36 per cent of Italy's Jews are actively employed. Of these, 60 per cent are independent and 40 per cent are employees. Fifty-seven per cent of all actively employed Jews are in commerce, 16 per cent are professionals, and 14 per cent are workers and technicians.

PASTORE TO SPEAK

U.S. Senator John O. Pastore will be the principal speaker at the Annual Chanukah Dinner of Yeshiva University on Sunday, Dec. 10, at the Waldorf-Astoria. He will speak on the role of higher education in dealing with contemporary social problems.

A member of the Senate since 1950, he now serves on the Appropriations Committee, Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, Commerce Committee, and Democratic Policy Committee. Senator Pastore was Keynote Speaker at the 1964 Democratic National Convention.

Mrs. David E. Seigle

Miss Judith Ellen Rotman, daughter of Mrs. Harold Rotman of 134 Reservoir Avenue, and the late Mr. Rotman, became the bride on Sunday, Dec. 2, of David Eric Seigle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Saul Seigle of 21 Bedford Road, Pawtucket. Rabbi Eli A. Bohnen, Rabbi Joel H. Zalman and Cantor Ivan E. Perlman officiated at the 6:30 p.m. ceremony at Temple Emanu-El, which was followed by a reception in the temple meeting hall.

Given in marriage by her brother, Morris H. Rotman, the bride wore an ivory peau de sole gown fashioned with a bateau neckline, long pointed sleeves, an A-line silhouette skirt enhanced with Alencon lace over French net, centered with pearls. The dress had a Watteau chapel train centered on the same lace. She carried her mother-in-law's Bible with a cascade of stephanotis centered with a white orchid.

Miss Betsy Seigle, sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor, and Mrs. Geoffrey Cooper, cousin of the bride, was matron of honor.

Richard Seigle served as best man for his brother. Ushers were Gerald Bloom, Kenneth Podrat, Peter Turner and Edward Zuckerman.

Grandparents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rosen of Providence and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence H. Seigle of Brooklyn, N.Y. Grandparents of the bride were the late Mr. and Mrs. Morris Rotman of Providence and the late Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gilbert of Brockton, Mass.

After a two week wedding trip to Nassau, the couple will reside in Pawtucket.

Agency Leader Points To 'Right Of Dissent'

NEW YORK - The president of the Synagogue Council of America, the central agency of the three branches of Judaism, took sharp issue with Lieut. General Lewis B. Hershey over his recent recommendation to draft boards that they conscript anyone with draft liability who obstructs Selective Service procedures.

Calling attention to a policy statement on "The Right of Dissent," in which the council condemns the use of the Selective Service System "to quiet critics of Government policy," Rabbi Jacob Philip Rudin declared that "such a suppression of dissent debases the system and poses a threat to our most precious freedom, the right freely to speak one's mind."

Rabbi Rudin acknowledged that dissent can be and occasionally has been expressed in an illegal manner, but he said that it is the responsibility of our courts of justice, not of the Selective Service System, to determine if a person has violated the law. "General Hershey's recommendation constitutes a dangerous usurpation of the role of the courts."

Rabbi Rudin called on President Johnson to "rescind General Hershey's action" and to establish procedures "that would prevent the use of the compulsory draft in a way that threatens our democratic process."

Underground Group Wants PLO Members

BEIRUT, Lebanon - A Palestinian underground organization, El-Fatah, has moved to take complete control of Arab Palestinian activity.

In a statement circulated in several Arab countries, copies of which were received here, El-Fatah asked the Palestine Liberation Organization to liquidate itself and turn over its funds to El-Fatah. Members of the Palestine Liberation Army were urged to join them.

Check That Check — Before You Sign It

I've just finished reading the sad story of Sam and Joe. Let's stick to their first names. It's a story from the Southwest, and I wouldn't want to rile the pair by going into too much detail.

Anyway, here's the story. Sam and Joe were such good friends that Sam said "okay" without thinking about it when Joe asked to borrow a bank check. Seemed natural enough. They've used the same bank for years, and with Joe's signature on the check, what could go wrong?

Well, what went wrong was this. Sam's next bank statement showed that his account was depleted by exactly the amount Joe had withdrawn.

How come? The answer is — automation. The bank recently installed a sorting machine to handle thousands of checks. When Joe's check turned up, the machine spotted Sam's code number, and recorded it as a withdrawal from Sam's account. Sam hit the ceiling. Joe couldn't explain, and it took a bit of investigating at the bank before the truth came out.

That's one of the hazards of progress. A mere human could have seen that the signature was what counted. But gadgets thrive on figures — occasionally with the result experienced by Sam and Joe.

It's a cautionary tale for anyone with a checking account. If you loan a check, even drawing a heavy line through your code number may not be enough. The machine may "look" right through the line, and record the number anyhow.

Coded checks stamped with your name carry another hazard with them. Forgers thrive on such documents. All a member of this fraternity needs is a clutch of your checks, and he can subsidize a cross-country spree by signing your name and his amount on one after another.

Then there's the blank check — one that bears your signature and nothing else. This is a dangerous thing to leave lying around because a second party can fill in the blanks, and then present the check at the bank without fear. After all, the signature is authentic, not forged.

The precautions are mainly a matter of common sense, but it might be just as well to ask about them at your bank. There's peace of mind in knowing who's cashing your checks, and for how much.

ARAB POLICIES

JERUSALEM - Prime Minister Eshkol revealed in the Knesset that at the recent Arab summit conference in Khartoum, Abdel Nasser urged the Arab countries to exert their maximum efforts towards the goal of launching a new attack upon Israel, this time with the assurance of victory. King Hussein asserted at the same conference that after Israel's withdrawal from the occupied areas, the Arabs will be able to resume their harassment and armed incursions into Israel.

Rabbis Debate Branches Of Judaism, Find Creed Differences Stand Firm

MONTREAL - Orthodox, Conservative and Reform Jewry continue to disagree: in an age of ecumenism the Jewish creedal differences stand firm. The topic was debated recently by three prominent rabbis.

Rabbi Walter Wurtzbarger, a member of the faculty of Yeshiva University; Rabbi Arthur Hertzberg, a Conservative on the Columbia faculty, and Rabbi Joseph Klein, Reform rabbi of Temple Emanuel, Worcester, Mass., discussed the subject at the biennial assembly of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

They disagreed even about the scope and significance of their disagreements, but there was some accord on the possibilities of cooperation that, if properly exploited, might help to "forge a stronger, more aware and more creative Jewish community."

Rabbi Hertzberg suggested three possible areas in which cooperation instead of competition could be established: adult education, the education of children and the furthering of synagogue membership among the non-affiliated.

Rabbi Wurtzbarger held that these activities were fundamentally religious and must be pursued separately by each of the three branches in the context of "Jewish pluralism."

According to Rabbi Klein, there is "an amazing degree of unity within the secular stream of Jewish life." However, he saw "real and growing differences among the three branches of the rabbinate, especially in the area of inter-marriage and divorce."

Rabbi Wurtzbarger declared that there is no such thing as a secular Jew.

"We are all part of the mystic body of Israel regardless of affiliation," he said, adding that "that is why we react so differently from non-Jews to the tragedy of the holocaust (the Nazi period) and why we feel so personally involved with the fate of the State of Israel."

Summarizing the discussion, Rabbi Jack Bemporad, director of the union's Commission on Worship and Adult Education, said, "only through such forums can representatives of the different religious Jewish creeds freely and honestly confront what both unites and separates them, and eventually find a way to overcome the real differences that divide us and find a way to eventual union."

For some time Jewish leaders have been concerned with the theological differences separating the three branches of Judaism, contending that these differences do not strengthen Judaism but, on the contrary, impair its practice.

The three branches have a considerable common core of beliefs and practices. However, there are notable differences.

Orthodoxy maintains the binding authority of Jewish religious laws, known as Halachah. Orthodoxy has an embracing devotion to the Torah, the first five books of Moses.

Conservative Judaism also maintains this principle but holds that growth and development are an essential element of Judaism's nature. For instance, in Orthodox synagogues the women are separated from the men; Conservative Judaism permits mixed worship, as does Reform Judaism.

Reform Judaism, a radical departure from the other branches, stresses the evolving character of Judaism and the need for constant reinterpretation toward the needs of modern Jewish life.

2 European Banks Defy Arab Boycott

LONDON - A German and an Italian bank are apparently risking the loss of their sizable Arab business by sponsoring, with other banks, a $15-million Israeli bond issue. The loan is Israel's first commercial borrowing in the European capital market.

The Deutsche Bank, Germany's largest bank, and the Banca Commerciale Italiana, a leader in the Eurodollar market, are joining two Israeli banks in the primary syndicate, which is headed by S. G. Warburk & Co. and N. M. Rothschild & Sons, both of London, and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. of New York.

The borrower is Israel's Industrial Development Bank, which is about 57 per cent owned by the state. The interest rate for the 15-year issue is expected to be 7 per cent, offered at a discount to yield more than 7 1/4 per cent.

The sponsorship of the issue has attracted comment here. Warburg, Rothschild, and Kuhn, Loeb are apparently on the Arab boycott list forever and have little to lose, but the German and Italian support, seemingly as a matter of principle, could cost them business.

Observers are now waiting to see which international merchant banks and investment dealers will be listed when the normal "Tombstone" advertisement appears, naming members of the secondary syndicate.

'Deputy Playwright Asks West German Memorial To Jewish Nazi Victims

WEST BERLIN - The controversial playwright, Rolf Hochhuth, has called upon the mayor and the senate of Berlin to establish a memorial to the Jewish victims of Nazism at the villa on Grosser Wannsee street where in January, 1942, Nazi leaders prepared the blueprint of the "final solution," the destruction of European Jewry.

Hochhuth, whose play "The Deputy" created a storm of controversy over its charge that Pope Pius XI failed to intervene with Nazi authorities against the deportation and slaughter of Jews, proposed the memorial in a letter to the acting mayor, published in the newspaper, "Welt am Sonntag."

He pointed out, that, except for obelisks at the death camp sites of Bergen-Belsen, Dachau and Buchenwald, there is no monument in all of West Germany to remind the nation of the "final solution" and what it was.

He suggested that the villa, now used as a recreation center for children, be converted in part to a center for documentation and historical research into the Nazi period. He said sufficient space would remain to maintain the facilities for children.

Dr. Sachar To Resign Brandeis Presidency

WALTHAM, Mass. — Dr. Abram Sachar, 68, founding president of Brandeis University, will give up his present post within two years to become chancellor.

The board created the post of chancellor to relieve Dr. Sachar of a job that he said called for 16 hours of work per day. Dr. Sachar, said he wanted to "leave the ivory foxhole and return to the ivory tower" and to devote more time on assignments "to serve American life."

He is one of the few university presidents who is also on the faculty. Dr. Sachar teaches a course in 20th-century history.

In the 20 years since Dr. Sachar was called out of retirement to head the newly-established Jewish sponsored non-sectarian university, Brandeis has grown from a small college with an original freshman class of 107 students and one main building in the shape of a medieval castle to a university with an international student body of 2,500 studying on a campus with more than 70 modern buildings valued at more than $50 million.

For And About Teenagers

THE WEEK'S LETTER:

"I'm a little young to have such a problem and I'd rather not give my age. I have to sneak out to see this person I am in love with, because my parents don't approve of him for some unknown reason. I'm engaged to him and I know the marriage will go through for we love each other dearly. After we're married, we probably won't visit my parents too often, for I'd feel as unwelcome as he would. I can't quit him. What should I do?"

OUR REPLY: You realize that you are a "little young" to have such a problem. If you realize this, you are probably too young to get married. And, what are the other factors? How old is the boy you are engaged to? Or, is he a man? If he is young, he is almost surely not prepared to take on the responsibilities of a family. If he is considerably older than you are, your marriage, if it takes place, will probably be handicapped by the fact you do not have many mutual interests. Think the situation out, clearly. Do your parents object because you are too young? And, because he is too young? Or, because he is too old for you?

If you have a teenage problem you want to discuss, or an observation to make, address your letter to FOR AND ABOUT TEENAGERS, COMMUNITY AND SUBURBAN PRESS SERVICE, FRANKFORT, KY.

Beth El To Present Israeli Art Exhibit

The Murray Greenfield Galleries of Tel Aviv and New York will present a collection of Israeli art for viewing and for sale on Sunday at Temple Beth El. Mr. Greenfield, who will be in Providence on Sunday to open his collection, was born in the United States. The exhibition will open with a sherry hour at 4 p.m. on Sunday and will be open until 8 p.m.

Hours on Monday and Tuesday will be from 2 to 5 p.m. In the afternoon and from 7 to 9 o'clock in the evening. On Wednesday, the show will be open only from 2 to 5 p.m.

He became involved with Israel in 1947 when he was captain of the ship "Hatikvah," a sister ship to the "Exodus," which attempted to smuggle immigrants into Palestine.

He entered the art field after the establishment of the State of Israel. His collection of Israeli art encompasses the work of the best-known Israeli artists and includes prints, oils, sculpture, mosaic and artifacts.

William Bojar is chairman and Mrs. Peter H. Bardach is co-chairman of the affair. The public is invited to attend.

BRIDGE

By Robert E. Starr

Today's hand is actually one of the easiest I have ever presented and yet because of those two familiar old bugaboos, the drawing of Trumps too early and playing for a suit to break 3-3 some of the Declarers failed to make it. Because of the simplicity I will not mention any names for the players who made this hand do not really deserve any credit. Rather I should single out some of those complacent ones who suddenly had the hand blow up in their faces and rightfully so.

The bidding should have been as follows: South was dealer with everyone vulnerable.

3H	P	4S	End

North	East
♠ J 6 5	♠ 7 3
♥ A 7 5	♥ J 2
♦ 10 9 6 2	♦ K J 8 7 3
♣ A 4 3	♣ K Q 8 5

West	South
♠ 8 4 2	♠ A K Q 10 9
♥ Q 10 9 8	♥ K 6 4 3
♦ Q 5 4	♦ A
♣ J 10 9	♣ 7 6 2

To discuss the bidding, all Souths did open the same and East and West never entered the auction. Some Norths, most of whose partners were opening four card majors, responded one No Trump. South's rebid in almost all cases was Two Hearts although two of the more impatient players didn't bother to look for a possible better 4-4 fit in Hearts and jumped right to game in Spades. One North, after hearing his partner rebid Hearts felt that his Heart Ace was better support than his Spade Jack and raised the Heart suit. The poor partner had no chance in that contract. At any rate, the final contract in most cases was Four Spades and the lead was the Club Jack.

A very small minority of the Declarers, I am happy to report won the Club Ace, drew all the Trumps and then prayed the Hearts would break evenly. When they did not, they lost two Hearts and two Clubs, down one. They complained that they had received a bad break but had really gotten just what they deserved, a normal 4-2 split. Remember, when the number of cards out against you in a suit is an even number, they probably will not break evenly.

The proper way to play the hand, and when I explained it to those who had gone down they were amazed that they had not seen it themselves, was to win the first Club trick and after playing one high Spade from South but not any more, to play the Ace and King of Hearts and then lose a Heart. If one of the defenders ruffs one of the high ones it is just too bad and the hand couldn't have been made anyhow which is the reason for the first Spade play, to give yourself that infinitesimal extra chance that someone might have a singleton Heart and maybe that same player has but one Spade. Hardly likely but certainly worth the free insurance as it costs nothing to do this.

After both defenders do follow on the first two Hearts, it doesn't matter what they lead back. They probably will cash their two Club tricks and then play a Diamond which South will win with his singleton Ace. Now the last Heart is played and ruffed with that carefully conserved Spade Jack. That makes the tenth trick as Declarer has nothing left in his hand now but good Trumps. As you can see this hand was too easy, another of those "You can't see the forest for the trees things".

Many hands of this type come up and should be recognized but unfortunately so many Declarers do not look at hands correctly and have learned too well that first basic lesson to pull Trumps.

Moral: When your partner has bid two suits, even if you have the Ace, King and Queen of the second one and the 4, 3 and 2 of the first, prefer that first suit. It may be longer and can never be shorter.

Court Rules Rabbi Needed At Wedding

JERUSALEM - Israel's Supreme Court ruled recently that a wedding of two Jewish couples in a kibbutz without a rabbi but in the presence of witnesses was not a valid ceremony.

The five Justices unanimously refused to call on the Rabbinical Court to reconsider its ruling that the marriages are invalid.

The court did not deal with the issue of whether the presence of witnesses made the ceremony valid under Jewish religious law, ruling only that the "public interest" demanded that weddings be performed only by persons authorized to do so by Israel's Parliament, which had delegated that authority to rabbis.

Justice Simon Agranat, president of the court, who wrote the unanimous opinion, declared that the time was "not yet ripe" in Israel for the introduction of fundamental social changes such as civil marriage.

A Sense Of Loss

There are few occasions when the poverty of words is so apparent as when a loved member of the community dies. To say, quite truthfully, that a man or woman has been an inspiration is made less meaningful by the many times when this phrase has been used mechanically, or by those who needed to say something and this was an obvious remark. It was, however, true of a Providence rebbetzin, Mrs. Emanuel Lazar, whose death last week at a comparatively early age has left this community poorer.

Those who only knew her here in Providence never wondered why a national organization re-elected her to the maximum number of terms permitted a president. She must have brought to the national scene also those distinguishing characteristics which make her loss so sharply felt here: warmth, modesty, efficiency, sincerity, cheerfulness and a genuine interest in people. Her passing leaves even those who knew her slightly with a sense of loss; more than most, she was an example and an inspiration.

De Gaulle Grows Old

President Charles de Gaulle, no longer a shining example of how to grow old gracefully, appears to have public delusions of grandeur in which France will be re-established as a continental power of the Western world and a major Middle East producer of oil. At his recent and in many ways lamentable press conference, the general appeared to think these changes in France's present status will be brought about with the help of anti-Semitic and anti-Canadian propaganda.

His demand that Quebec become a sovereign state and that the "solidarity of the French community on both sides of the Atlantic become organized" is a remarkably unrealistic appraisal of Canadian affairs, and an example of almost unbelievable chutzpah. Prime Minister Pearson found it "intolerable that a head of a foreign state or government should recommend a course of political or constitutional action which would destroy . . . the unity of the Canadian state."

The French President's anti-Semitic remarks may stem from several factors, but an obvious reason for them is the intensive French effort to win major oil positions in the Middle East and the consequent necessity (in the General's private fantasies, at any rate) to follow the Arab line. France sometimes appears to have been blessed with more than her share of bad leaders, who have brought her neither glory nor honor. If the aging president continues in the path he has chosen, then he, too, must be added to their number, despite his wartime record.

HARRY GOLDEN

Causerie On Marriage

That wonderful classic "Anatomy of Melancholy" by Robert Burton has come into my hands again, and I have been reading it constantly. Robert Burton, like Shakespeare, has been accused of letting Sir Francis Bacon write his book. This is a canard. I suspect the Baconians always bring these matters up because they were visibly surprised that Lord Bacon wound up a magistrate.

Anatomy of Melancholy is learned and scholarly but it is also witty and one of the books most applicable to our times. The New York State Court of Appeals once reached a decision in a divorce case using the Anatomy of Melancholy as its authority. It is known as the Paternoster Case.

Testimony in the case proved a man had met a woman not his wife at the railroad station, that together with her and baggage had taken a hack to a New York City hotel, has registered at said hotel with said woman as man and wife and had adjourned with her to the room assigned.

In court, the contention of the defense was that this incident provided no direct proof of misconduct. The final opinion, written by Justice William J. Gaynor (who was later mayor of New York), said the court did indeed draw an inference of misconduct from these activities.

The court, he said, could certainly assume the said man and said woman were not going up to the said room to say their prayers. Justice Gaynor went on to cite a passage from Anatomy of Melancholy which says of people under such conditions, "It is presumeth he saith not a paternoster."

Of marriage itself, Mr. Burton wrote, "Tis the sweetest thing in the world." He has a woman ruminate on marriage thus: "Heigh-ho for a husband, cries she, a bad husband, nay the worst that ever was, is better than none. O blissful marriage, do earnestly seek it and are never well till we have effected it."

"But what with fate? Like those birds in the Emblem, that fed about a cage, so long as they could fly away at their pleasure, liked well of it; but when they were taken and could not get loose, though they had the same meat, pined away for sullenness, and would not eat."

FROM FRIDAY TO FRIDAY

And He Wore A Seamless Garment

By Beryl Segal

Clothes, they say, make the person.

Well, they do not exactly make him, but they are a barometer of the kind of person he is.

Take one look at the men and women you meet and you can tell quite a bit about their character by the garments they wear.

You can tell whether the person is sloppy or neat.

Does the person wear flashy clothes or more reserved and conservative apparel?

Is the person particular about the clothes or doesn't it matter what clothes he wears as long as they are presentable?

Is the person poor or rich?

Does he have good taste or is he vulgar?

Is he risque or conventional?

Some people dress according to their rank or station in life. Others, on the other hand, do not choose to proclaim to the world who they are and what they are.

The Rabbis of the Middle Ages had something to say in this matter. They spoke out against ostentation. If fortune was good to you, do not show off with it—they taught us. Another man who is just as good as you, and just as wise, may not be blessed with worldly goods as you are. He will envy you. Envy may bring him to despise you. Despising you may bring to spilling blood.

"Spilling of blood," either literally or figuratively, was the greatest of sins. Putting someone to shame is also a form of "spilling blood."

The Rabbis of old were addressing themselves to the people of their own days, but they could just as well be talking to us in this year of 1967. We, too, are prone to dress ostentatiously and bedeck ourselves with all kinds of adornments.

They could point to Moses. Here is Moses, a Prince in Israel, a Prophet of God, a Teacher of a people, a Judge between man and man, and see what he wore.

I translate according to Rabbi William G. Braude of Temple Beth El:

"Rabbi Eliazer ben Jose taught: On each of the seven days of consecration, Moses wore a white linen garment that had no seams, ministering as High Priest."

The talk is of the seven days in which Moses was to install his brother Aaron into the priesthood. He put on him the garments of gold and silver and blue and purple. He put on him the Ephod and the Breastplate with the twelve precious stones, according to the names of the twelve Tribes of Israel. He adorned him with the Mitre and the crown of pure gold. And he dressed him with the tunics and all the clothes of the station to which Aaron was induced, the First High Priest of Israel.

Garments fit for a Prince and

King and High Personage.

But Moses himself?

He wore a seamless garment . . .

A seamless garment made of white linen.

That and nothing else.

Now a seamless garment might mean several things.

It might signify purity. Purity in mind and body. Just as a garment of pure white linen has no speck on it, so is the person himself spotless and blameless.

It might mean modesty. Nothing to show-off in a seamless garment. No rank, no station. He wore a seamless garment of pure white linen as everybody else, I suppose, wore in the wilderness.

It might mean simplicity. No complicated twists and turns in this man's character. He is as near to every one who wants to know him as the very air one

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

by Sylvia Porter

"The entire world looks to America now," said President Johnson to a Cabinet meeting hastily called after the British devalued the pound Nov. 18. "We are the bellwether. Our economic strength and the soundness of our dollar must never be doubted."

Proud words indeed, and the President backed them up with an even prouder public pledge to the world: "I reaffirm unequivocally the commitment of the United States to buy and sell gold at the existing price of $35 an ounce" (which means, as yesterday's column explained, a pledge not to devalue the dollar.)

But the fact is that central bankers and foreign governments around the world are beginning to doubt the soundness of the dollar. The fact is that the dollar is in a weak position; and this is so even though the rush to turn dollars into gold which followed the British devaluation has subsided. The fact is that we are vulnerable to attack and we would be guilty of the most reprehensible folly if we pretend that we aren't. To continue the quiz.

Q. WHY IS THE SOUNDNESS OF THE DOLLAR IN QUESTION?

A. Because for years, we have continued to spend many more billions of dollars abroad than we have earned abroad. As a result, foreign governments and central banks have built up enormous dollar claims against our gold reserves. In 1965, in response to rising worries then about our dollar's soundness, we made a stern promise to our creditors that we would dry up breathes.

I was particularly impressed with the dress of some great men in our times. They also wore simple, unassuming clothes.

Do you remember Einstein, the great Einstein? He was always dressed in a sweater whenever he was in his laboratory, receiving guests, talking to students.

Or Pablo Casals. We never missed a Master Class of his on television. There he was with his little jacket, oblivious to all that was going on around him. He was all music. Dressy clothes were far from him. And that jacket made him so unassuming, so simple, and also so transparently pure.

Ostentation is always ugly. It is unpleasant to be in the company of an ostentatious person. It is almost painful to hear such a person talk. It is even more painful to see such a person dress up, adorned with jewelry, furs, and what not.

And he wore a seamless garment.

Don't we wish we could be as modest, as simple as Moses?

(Mr. Segal's opinions are his own and not necessarily those of this newspaper.)

the red ink in our international financial accounts. But we have failed to do so.

Once again in 1967, we will run a big deficit in our balance of payments. It will amount to a huge $2.5-$3 billion, as a result of our Vietnam spending, our overseas tourist spree, continuing investments abroad by U.S. corporations, military and economic aid programs. And this, mind you, comes on top of a long string of annual deficits.

What underpins the dollar is the fact that our exports of goods are so much greater than our imports of goods. But in the midst of last week's nervousness, the Commerce Department had to announce that in October, our trade surplus dwindled to the lowest since early 1965. Our trade surplus is now running at an annual rate of around $4.4 billion, big but not as big as we anticipated.

Q. HOW MUCH DO WE OWE TO FOREIGNERS AGAINST GOLD?

A. As of now, qualified foreign creditors of the U.S. have $28 billion in dollar claims for which they could, legally, demand gold on demand.

As of today, our gold reserve is only $12 billion-plus, down from $22.7 billion as recently as the end of 1950.

Q. ARE WE BANKRUPT THEN?

A. Of course not. But the reason this can be said so confidently is that our foreign creditors are willing to hold our dollars and not to exercise their right to demand gold in exchange. They have faith in our money and would rather hold dollars on which they can earn interest than gold on which they could earn nothing and which would cost them money to store.

The key word is "faith". If our creditors lost that and staged a run on the dollar as the creditors of Britain staged a run on the pound, we could be drained of every ounce of gold and still not have enough.

Q. HOW COULD DEVALUATION BE MANAGED?

A. In theory, it could be done only by an act of Congress and the President couldn't even propose devaluation unless Congress first gave him authority to do so. This is written into the Bretton Woods Agreement Act.

But in reality, what probably would happen if the U.S. were pushed into a corner is that the President would declare a national emergency and then under the 1917 Trading With the Enemy Act, the President could do just about anything.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS LAUNCH DRIVE: Mayor Philip W. Noel of Warwick, with committee members of the Knights of Pythias, helped celebrate the sixth birthday of Robert Coutcher of 42 Vera Street, Warwick recently. A victim of Cystic fibrosis, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Coutcher, Sr., Robert is this year's poster boy. The celebration was the kick-off of the campaign to raise $6,000 for ultra sonic equipment to treat this disease at local hospitals. Among those present were, left to right, Raphael Pitchon, drive secretary; Mayor Noel; Robert Coutcher, and Sidney Backman, co-chairman of the drive.

Paramilitary Fishing Kibbutz Set Up In Occupied Sinai

NAHAL YAM, United Arab Republic — The westernmost settlement in the Israeli-occupied Sinai Peninsula lies beside a salt-water lagoon on the Mediterranean coast, less than 50 miles from the Suez Canal.

It is a para-military fishing kibbutz established by the Nahal, a branch of the Israeli Army that combines fighting and farming. Its members are boys and girls in their late teens who volunteer for the often dangerous job of settling Israel's border areas.

Nahal Yam, as the new settlement is called, is the most remote of the four Israeli settlements that have put down roots in the occupied territories since the June war. The others are scattered through the Syrian heights and the west bank of the Jordan River. More than anything else, their presence has given rise to skepticism about Israel's intention of giving back the land she occupied during the war.

At the moment, Nahal Yam (Nahal is an abbreviation for fighting pioneers; Yam means "sea" in Hebrew) consists of a number of large army tents pitched next to two single-story brick buildings. A clump of eucalyptus trees provides a meager patch of shade, but otherwise the scene is strictly sand.

Before the war, the buildings served as a station on the Gaza-Ismailla railroad line, which runs along the Mediterranean coast to the Suez Canal before turning south. On the wall of the former station someone has written "Welcome to Israel" in Hebrew.

When the station was in Egyptian hands, two brothers from Cairo had a fishing operation here that employed 600 people and yielded about 1,500 tons of fresh fish in a six-month season. The Arab workers lived in a village about 12 miles to the west.

The Israeli tents are pitched on concrete foundations, which have been poured into the fine white Sinai sand. So far, only a building for showers and toilets has been constructed.

The lagoon is marked on maps as Lake Bardawil, which is the Arab approximation of Baldwin, the name of the first of the Crusader Kings, who built a fortress on the western end of the lagoon in the 11th century. The shallow lake is about 15 miles wide and 50 miles long. It is landlocked by a natural sand breakwater. The water is warm, densely salty and rich in fish.

Each dawn for the last six weeks, four small boats filled with Nahal Yam members have set out into the rising sun. They fish until the early afternoon, and usually return with their open boats filled to the gunwales with sea bass and several local species.

Working with long nylon nets, the Israelis have brought in an average of 500 to 600 pounds of fish a day. Their catch is packed in ice and shipped across the desert to the market in Ascalon, north of Gaza.

"We are still a long way from turning a profit," the young lieutenant who heads the unit said. "But give us enough time and we will make it pay."

"There is no shortage of fish, it is just a matter of getting enough boats and nets and equipment," he said.

Nahal traditionally attracts the most rugged and aggressively patriotic of Israeli youth, most of whom have grown up in kibbutzim. The boys of Nahal Yam dress in rumpled olive drab while the girls wear khaki blouses over distractingly short shorts. They take their meals together in a large tent, which serves as the dining hall. On a recent day, its military interior was relieved by vases of fresh roses on each table.

The girls' principal duty is kitchen work, but they have begun to branch out. They are raising chickens and ducks and have planted a bed of gladioli in the sand.

"I think it's marvelous here," one girl said. "It's a perfect winter resort. Lots of sun and sand and fresh fish every night of the week."

Technion Scientist Develops New Desalination Technique

HAIFA, Israel — A new technique in the desalination of sea water that was said to cut the cost of building and operating distillation plants was reported last week by scientists of Technion, the Israel institute of technology here.

The invention will make it possible to eliminate the immense quantities of metal used in conventional distillation plants.

Prof. Abraham Kogan, the inventor, said the development could cut the cost of water by 25 to 30 per cent. He added however, that it could be more or it could be less.

A pilot plant with a capacity of 20,000 to 40,000 gallons is to be started soon. Professor Kogan said that stage would continue for three years.

In the various conventional distillation processes, vapor extracted from the steam of brine condenses against cold metal surfaces.

Professor Kogan's system provides for direct contact be-

Philharmonic To Offer 'Christmas Oratorio'

"The Christmas Oratorio" by Johann Sebastian Bach will be featured at the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra's third annual Christmas concert on Saturday at 8:30 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. It has been announced by Francis Madeira, music director.

Mr. Madeira will conduct the orchestra which will be joined by the Pelouquin Chorale and members of the Chorale of Boston College. C. Alexander Pelouquin, director of music at the Cathedral of Sts. Peter and Paul, is the conductor of both choral groups.

Soloists for the Oratorio are Elizabeth Schwering, soprano; Muriel Watt, contralto; Robert Peters, tenor, and David Laurent, baritone.

tween the vapor and a stream of cold sweet water.

He said that apart from elimination the need for miles and miles of tubing inside the large distillation plants, his system would save energy, since less heat would be required if the steam did not have to penetrate metal.

The distilled water emerging from the system is hot. It is piped into the bottom of a column and solids are dropped through it.

The heart of the system is a multistage pipeline with compartments in a vacuum. A channel of hot sea water flows up the conduit and there is a counter current of cold desalted water coming down.

The fluid on the hotter side accordingly flashes into steam and moves over the partition to condense.

Since the temperature of the brine reduces as it moves up the conduit, the pressure in each vacuum compartment reduces accordingly.

FAVORS NEGOTIATIONS

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — Corneliu Manescu, president of the General Assembly and Foreign Minister of Rumania, favors direct negotiations between Israel and the Arab states as a means of achieving a settlement of the Middle East crisis. He was careful to note that he speaks as the Foreign Minister of Rumania, not in his capacity of Assembly president.

He said, "We have to be realistic and take into account the sovereignty and rights of existence of every country in the region." He believes that the Security Council should be allowed more time for its consultations on a Middle East resolution before sending the matter back to the Assembly.

Brighton Rabbi Suffers Harassment, Violence

LONDON - A hand grenade was thrown into the home of a Brighton rabbi while he and his family slept, after two weeks of harassment and threats of violence from unidentified parties.

The grenade was thrown through a window in the house of Rabbi Bernard Braunstein. It damaged walls, floors, ceilings and furniture, but caused no injuries to the rabbi, his wife or their six children. The incident occurred shortly after police, who have been guarding the house, went off duty. According to the Braunstein family, a slab of concrete was hurled through a front window of the house a week ago, and they have been subjected to threatening telephone calls day and night and to at least two visits by men who threatened violence. Police have a description of one of the callers and are searching for him.

Several prominent Rhode Island doctors have volunteered their professional services

The group is clearly recognized as being non-political; it is simply a relief organization. By publicizing what they see, its members call attention to problems which the United States and Vietnam governments must solve. As a result of the agitation stirred up by COR, the government has spent more money and sent fact-finding committees which have returned with quite different results. Other eye-witnesses. . .COR doctor teams, David Stickney and David Elder of the American Friends Service Committee, Nell Sheehan of the New York Times, Frank H. Epp of The Canadian Mennonite, Frank Harvey of Flying Magazine and Nurse Anne Pirnie in the Honolulu Advertiser . . . write sadly of the vast numbers of war-caused civilian deaths (10 times as many as military men, in one estimate) and of the dreadful napalm and white phosphorus injuries.

At least 10,000 under the age of 13 will be admitted to Vietnamese hospitals this year with war-related wounds, according to South Vietnamese Ministry of Health and U.S.-AID statistics. An unknown number, at least 20,000, will never get to the hospitals to be counted. COR doctors who investigated wrote, "We raged at the products of the war and our own impotence. We must do what we can." COR has found money, though it needs much more, doctors, hospitals, foster homes and transportation for specific children whose severe wounds warrant their immediate removal here for adequate care.

The ambassador to Switzerland wrote: "With regard to my country in any case the magnitude of suffering and misery are such that all the good will in the world and all the charitable undertakings will never be enough."

Rabbi Blumberg evinces a concern shared increasingly by Rhode Islanders for demonstrating in this way their distress at what the war is doing to children too young to care about ideologies.

Rabbi and Mrs. Blumberg are also busy with the R. I. Educational Childbirth Association, which in some respects is an outgrowth of Dr. Read's "natural childbirth." Its goal is providing a family-centered childbirth experience for those who want it.

"For some girls childbirth is frightening, a big void. They know very little," said Paula Blumberg, who when she was pregnant found a group in Boston and "trapped up once a week for two months for classes," in which she and her husband learned more about the process of birth, different exercises which they could do together, what to do when labor began, etc. Since they have no family here (he is from Philadelphia, she from New York City), the experience was especially important. She could not have done it without her husband's support and participation, said the mother of two healthy, alert youngsters, Naomi, aged three, and 21-month-old Jonathan.

The R. I. organization started last spring when two local women contacted the parent organization in Boston, got two speakers and met in a living room. Meetings are now held in the Lying-In Hospital auditorium (perhaps because the hospital prefers to have such a group where it can be watched) and 200 interested persons turned out this fall for a film by a Denver doctor and a panel discussion.

Serene, low-voiced Mrs. Blumberg is liaison between the group and the professional community . . . obstetricians, pediatricians, psychologists . . . as diverse a degree of the professional community as we can involve. Our group says, "We have this to offer. If you want to go through childbirth without medication, here we are; with some medication, here we are; if you want to be completely put out, here we are."

It is a fulfilling, not a fanatic group, which is still in the midst of a struggle to get obstetricians to allow or encourage "educated" childbirth, partially because it takes more time to deal with a patient who is not medicated. In one case a doctor was impressed with the theory, and the woman went through labor in a private room. Hospital facilities are one of the most severe drawbacks for educated childbirth. Mrs. Blumberg thinks that a girl "should be able to do this, but right now there is no normal way." Anyone wanting it will have to exert more effort than just the meetings and exercises. About six local obstetricians are willing to lend their support.

Ideally, a prospective parent would take the course during the second trimester of pregnancy and continue with the exercises until she went into labor. It was the crowning highlight of her life, said the rabbi's wife.

Publicizing the association is difficult; the rabbi suggested sending information to all parents of new babies, as the organization is not just for first-time-pregnant women but for second or more. A mailing list of slightly more than 150 persons does not reach all they should, especially girls in the midst of family planning. . . they hope doctors will post the notices. Before their first meeting, posters were placed in supermarkets, newspaper and radio coverage was obtained and many nurses and student nurses were made aware of the group.

The next meeting will be held at 8:15 p.m. on Wednesday, Dec. 13, when Dr. Harold Musker, chief psychologist at Rhode Island Hospital, will present the psychiatric point of view on family-centered childbirth.

Also next Wednesday evening, but at 8 o'clock at the Summit Avenue School, Dr. Mark Chessler, a social psychologist and an associate of the Institute for Social Research of the University of Michigan, will discuss "What's Happening with our Teachers?" at the second open forum of the East Side Neighborhood Council. The series is entitled, "And Now That Our Schools Are Integrated . . ." and considers what is happening with children, teachers and in the community.

The first forum considered the Coleman Report (racial isolation in the public schools), and Jonathan Kozol, the Boston teacher whose Book, "Death at an Early Age," has shaken Bostonians, will speak in January. Melvin King, executive director of Boston's Urban League, will speak at the fourth meeting and Brown University President Ray Heffner at the final forum.

Each is held at a different East Side school. The first was patterned for those to come: after the speaker, the people present break into buzz groups and talk, with a pre-picked leader. Negro and white members of the community, parents whose children are in school together, get to talk with one another in this oldest interracial group in the community (20 years old).

Rabbi Blumberg joined the East Side Neighborhood Council two years ago, when he was "feeling quite frustrated," not knowing how he could express himself in terms of interracial concepts. He noted that sometimes, by having a public meeting, you act as a catalyst and pointed to the O'Connor plan as an example.

The dynamic young rabbi stirred the congregation on Yom Kippur when he preached "An open letter to the American Negro," a sermon acknowledging the depth of need, the fact that a white man in America can scarcely imagine what it is like to be almost without hope, the necessity for common action. He spoke also of the impossibility of comparing the tragedy of Nazi Europe with the existence of Negroes here: "At first glance, these inhumanities may appear the same as those of old, but to me, whatever the similarities, they cannot be paired: Because you breathe and struggle and my brethren are dead, it is not the same! Because for you, there is still hope and for them there is none, it is not the same! Because for you, many stand ready to help. . . but for my brethren most onlookers were silent. . . it is not the same!"

And he spoke of Israel: "You cannot know what Israel means to me. I hardly understand always myself. But this is sure: Israel, its people, its soil, its dreams, its failings and its problems are part of me. You cannot accuse Israel without indicting me; you cannot condemn Israel without condemning me. . . when you mix religion and nationalism. . . challenging, cursing, condemning Israel, it is me you challenge, me you curse, me you condemn, and all your disclaimers fall on deaf ears!"

He has been to Israel twice (they spent most of 1963-64 there) and it "changed my life as a Jew. I realized other dimen-

Mowry Lowe Appointed To Advisory Commission

Mowry Lowe, Rhode Island broadcasting executive, was appointed as a member of the Advisory Commission on Educational Television. It was announced on Monday by Governor John H. Chafee. Mr. Lowe, general manager and vice-president of Radio Rhode Island, Inc., will succeed Peter Newell who has resigned.

The Commission advises the operators of Channel 36, WSBE-TV, the state owned television station.

Mr. Lowe, 57 and a Providence native, entered the broadcasting industry in 1930, beginning as an announcer with Providence station WEAN. During his years with WEAN, Mr. Lowe served as a salesman, as station sales manager, and finally as WEAN general manager.

After 24 years with WEAN, Mr. Lowe went to Troy, N.Y., to direct the operation of station WTRY, and in 1960 returned to Providence to begin formation of Radio Rhode Island, Inc., which in 1961 began broadcasting activities with the call letters, WLKW.

It will be followed by an open forum, in which the community is invited to participate. Refreshments will be served.

This meeting was originally scheduled in November but was snowed out.

No Breach Of Promise For Jewish Lothario

TEL AVIV - A Tel Aviv district judge ruled recently that a non-Jewish girl who was seduced by an Israeli Jew could not sue him for breach of promise to marry her because Israeli law bars Jews from marrying non-Jews.

The ruling was made by Judge H. S. Levenberg in voiding an earlier court decision barring the youth from leaving Israel. The judge said he was not happy with his ruling.

The non-Jewish girl, according to court records, met the youth in Tiberias and she lived with him, becoming pregnant.

According to the records, the youth decided to abandon the girl and she appealed for support to the courts, obtaining a stay on her lover's plans to leave the country.

ENGAGED: Mr. and Mrs. Simon Feldman of 107 Cole Avenue announce the engagement of their daughter, Rayna Sue, to Michael Philip Rosow, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Rosow of London, England, formerly of Scarsdale, N.Y.

Miss Feldman was graduated from Hope High School and is presently attending Windham College in Putney, Vt.

Mr. Rosow, an alumnus of Ardsley High School, is also a student at Windham College.

Hello Again!

Sports News By Warren Walden

TOO LATE FOR MACK SENNETT—You people who have been downtown in Providence on special days have seen a "Key-stone Cop" wandering around the City streets. And many of you people who have watched a Clown performing in a magic show have been entertained by "Flip-Top." Some, I'm sure, have listened to "Rawhide" entertaining with impersonations on a radio show. During that show, "Rhoda Gloom" and Mrs. Gilhooligan were one and the same person and "Uncle Tex," an elderly character from Texas, was also characterized by the same person. Talk about a "one-man show!" Jack Healey played all the parts and provided sound effects, too.

FLOATED THROUGH THE AIR — In addition to the above, Healey sometimes plays the part of a Hindu capable of foretelling the future through a crystal ball. Some of his predictions have been fulfilled, too. Having seen a trapeze artist in the Circus where he decided to play the part of a clown, he also decided to take a whirl at emulating the "man on the flying trapeze." His tales of trapeze work would make your hair stand on ends, especially the one about the rope that started stretching as Jack swooped back to earth from a long arc and high angle. "I kissed the ground going by," Healey says, "but my lip but came back for more when the rope was fixed."

WHEN YOU THINK YOU'RE BUSY — Think of Healey! He's been doing different kinds of shows since he was eight years old. How long ago is that? I don't know because he's one of those fellows who looks just the same and easily fights off the ravages of time. He has been an actor, a dancer and a comedian. The list is long and it doesn't even mention his adaptation to animals. His own private menagerie includes a Cockatoo, a Macaw, an Indian Minah-Bird, an African Gray Parrot, a Chimpanzee named Cindy and a woolly monkey named Willie. Jack also keeps two doves and a canary as well as his invisible dog, "Fido" who is always at his side. Sometimes, in fact, people are seen jumping away from "Fido" who, we might say, may be mainly a ventriloquist's creation. Well, and hoo, maybe it's a hobby and maybe it's a sport but Jack Healey, who lives in Pawtucket, makes it a sporting gesture for himself when he tries to be so versatile. He'll be on the stage with his magic shows at Loew's Theatre in Providence this Saturday and at the Leroy Theatre in Pawtucket next Saturday, both times at 9 in the morn, performing for the Outlet Santa Claus shows. They're free, so why don't you go?

LIKE THE HAIR ON THAT

MAN'S HEAD! It's off. And we're referring to Manny Almeida's scheduled boxing show at R.I. Aud. on Dec. 11th. Difficulty in making sure of good matches is the reason. Almeida says he will not operate unless he can present a grade A show. So, he's rescheduled it for Jan. 22nd. . . . REMEMBER MICHELUK? He was a great defenseman for the R. I. Reds. Syd Feldstein, who not only follows every game but also follows the puck every inch of the way, is loud in his praise of Moe Mantha of the Reds. "Best since Micheluk," says Sydney. . . . Mrs. Kay Christy, disappointed when the Friars lost last week, is confident that they'll win big in the future. . . . and . . . she says, "Those R. I. Reds will be in the playoffs." To which I agree.

THE BEST SAYS LARRY — Larry DeFrancisco who sells TV sets and looks at the tube all day and most of the night, too, says, "Football is the best sport on TV." Then he adds, "Baseball is great, too, and so is boxing and golf and I get more interested in bowling on TV than ever before; some of those sports fishing pictures are great! And so on and on goes Larry who has always been a diplomat. . . . Remember, "Some folks try so hard to succeed, they miss success all the way!" CARRY ON.

JACKIE INVITED

NEW YORK — Mrs. John F. Kennedy, widow of the late president, has been invited by Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban to visit Israel at her earliest opportunity. Mr. Eban extended the invitation at the Kennedy home when he and Mrs. Eban were the guests of honor at a private dinner for about eight guests.

BAR MITZVAH: Neal Howard Dwares, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Dwares of 32 Summit Avenue, became Bar Mitzvah on Sept. 16 at Providence Hebrew Day School. Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Morris Gold and Mr. and Mrs. Philip Dwares, all of Providence.

Average Israeli Age Totals Only 29 Years

JERUSALEM — As compared with other nations, the average age of the Israeli population is youthful, according to statistical data published in the new yearbook. The average age of the general population in Israel in 1966 was 29 years; of the Jewish population, 30, and of the non-Jewish, 21.

At the end of 1966, 42 per cent of the Jewish population was comprised of Sabras, 12 per cent born abroad who came to the country before the establishment of the state, 26 per cent foreign-born who settled between 1948 and 1954 and 20 per cent foreign-born who immigrated later. Among those born abroad, 23 per cent came from Asia, 25 per cent from Africa and 52 per cent from the Americas and Europe.

RECEIVES AWARD: Irving J. Fain of Providence, a leader of Reformed Jewry, received the Synagogue Statesman Award yesterday from the Synagogue Council of America, the central agency for the three branches of American Jewry. This award is the highest recognition bestowed by the Council to outstanding American Jews for "distinguished leadership and service to the community." Mr. Fain, who for many years has served as a trustee of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the national organization of Reform Jewry, is chairman of its Commission on Social Action, and a member of the National Advisory Council of the Synagogue Council. Rabbi Jacob Philip Rudin, Council president, made the presentation of the award.

Ledgemont Course Superintendent Heads N. E. Group

Anthony B. Caranci, Jr., golf course superintendent at the Ledgemont Country Club in Seekonk, Mass., was elected president of the Golf Course Superintendents' Association of New England at a meeting held earlier this week at the Holiday Inn in Newton, Mass.

Other officers elected are Richard C. Blake, Mt. Pleasant Country Club, Boylston, Mass., first vice-president; Robert E. Grant, Brae Burn Country Club, Newton, Mass., second vice-president, and Thomas G. Curran, Oak Hill Country Club, Fitchburg, Mass., secretary.

Mr. Caranci, who has been at Ledgemont since 1956, lives in North Providence. He was graduated from North Providence High School and the University of Massachusetts Winter School for Turf Managers, and has attended National Turf-Grass Educational Conferences throughout the United States and Canada.

Past president of the Rhode Island Golf Course Superintendents' Association and a member of that organization for 17 years, he had been vice president of the New England group prior to being elected to the presidency.

Before coming to Ledgemont, Mr. Caranci had been golf course superintendent at the Louisquisset Golf Club in North Providence.

The Lyons Den

by Leonard Lyons

Ingrid Bergman's accent is slight in "More Stately Mansions." After her British debut in "A Month in the Country" she realized that her accent contrasted with that of her co-stars Michael Redgrave and Emlyn Williams. By the time the play moved to London's West End her accent too was all-British, after special tutoring between performances.

Drew Pearson's first novel, "The Senator," will be published by Doubleday next year. The principal character is not unlike his target, Sen. Thomas Dodd of Connecticut. . . Tom Laughlin paid $275,000 for film rights to "The Exhibitionist". . . Peter Sellers will play a hippie lawyer in "I Love You, Alice B. Toklas". . . Benny Goodman has been invited to the King of Thailand's 40th birthday, in Bangkok, Dec. 10. They'll have a jam-session.

Florida's Gov. Kirk and his wife will take over Trude Heller's new Palm Beach discotheque Dec. 8. It will be a party for 26 Republican Governors and their wives, including the Rockefeller, Reagans and Romneys. The Nixons, Eisenhowers and Sen. Dirksen are expected, and will listen to the rock 'n' roll by Tommy Strand and The Upper Hand.

Albert Finney may return to Broadway with the London hit, "A Day in the Life of Joe Egg". . . Toots Shor welcomed Jesse Owens, the ex-track star, although Owens was wearing a white turtleneck. . . Vincent Sardi, Sr., is at St. Clare's Hospital. . . The USIA, which released the JFK film, "Years of Lightning, Day of Drums," will next release Harold Flender's "Roosevelt & the Depression."

Marlene Dietrich was at a supper party here, looking as slim and youthful as ever. One lady was filled with envy at seeing Miss Dietrich's famous limbs. She watched Marlene partake of the food, and uttered the curse: "I hope it goes to her legs. . ."

Shirley Booth may return to Broadway next season as the star of "Dear World," the musical version of "Madwoman of Chailott". . . John Hirsch, directing "Saint Joan" for the Lincoln Center Repertory received Canada's first SMC medal at an Ottawa investiture. . . Bing Crosby's first recording in a year features two songs from "How Now Dow Jones".

One of King Hussein's friends said that cigarettes in Jordan now come in three different sizes. He held up two fingers, and began: "(1) Regular size." Then he widened the span between the fingers and said: "(2) Longer size." Then he narrowed the span until the fingers almost met: "And (3) King size."

Shelley Winters will produce and star in the film version of Louis John Carlin's "Snow Angel". . . Producer Hal Prince will attend three premieres of his shows in three different countries in the same week: "Fiddler on the Roof" in Hamburg, "Cabaret" in London and "West Side Story" in Vienna. . . Gerold Frank, author of "The Boston Strangler," is doing research on his next book, about the Linda Fitzpatrick-Groovy Hutchinson murders.

Able Nathan, the Israeli peace pilot, sent a 280-word cable to LBJ. The reply came from a State Dept. employee. Nathan then asked the Tel Aviv overseas operator to get President Johnson on the phone. The operator said, "Able, I couldn't do that". . . Nathan insisted and warned that he'd complain to the Minister of the Interior. The operator placed the call.

The White House re-routed the call to the same State Dept. employee who'd answered the cable.

Mike Nichols had a special screening of "The Graduate" for the Richard Burtons, and then they started discussing another joint film project. . . Henry Fonda may appear with Sinatra in his next film, "The Chairman". . . No civil cases will be tried in the Bronx Supreme Court in January, enabling the judges to catch up with the criminal calendar. . . The Minskoffs' building on the site of the Hotel Astor will include a legit and a movie theater.

Jeanne Moreau will portray George Sand in a new film to be produced and directed by Cecil St. Laurent. . . Gunnar Jarring, the UN's mediator in the Middle East, will gather a staff, after conferring with the UN envoys from both factions. . . A young lady from Los Angeles had herself shipped to Frederick Loewe's Palm Springs home inside a crate.

Saul Bellow, the novelist, noticed some critics at a Writers Conference, and said: "They're the conductors on the Gravy Train". . . A musical, "Eleonor," will be written about Eleanor Roosevelt. . . Veteran playwright Arthur Arnt said about his first novel, "The Grave-diggers' Funeral": "It's the first time that I wrote 'The End' instead of 'Curtain.'"

MAKE-UP FAIRLY
NEW YORK — The Jewish community council of Far Rockaway has asked the Board of Education to notify school principals not to take punitive measures against students who skip after-class make-up sessions in order to attend Hebrew school. The make-up sessions were instituted to cover school work that was missed during the teachers' strike last September.

Your Money's Worth

French president de Gaulle spelled it out loud and clear to the world. He violently resents the U.S. dollar because it is a symbol of United States superiority. His aim now is to topple our currency from its position as pivot of the modern international monetary system and to force a return to gold as the only medium through which nations settle their debts with each other.

He will do all in his power to drain out our gold and he will encourage all our other creditors to do the same. He hopes to spur a 50 per cent devaluation of the dollar. He is utterly indifferent to the international chaos and possibly the worldwide trade depression which might follow.

While de Gaulle masked his maliciously mischievous message in majestic language, the above in essence is what he said in Paris at his semi-annual news conference.

What, you might ask at this point, is this all about? What is devaluation of the dollar? Why is it even being discussed? What might it mean? In this week's columns, I'll try to answer your key questions in simplest language.

Q. WHAT IS DEVALUATION OF THE DOLLAR?

A. The dictionary definition of devaluation is "to diminish the value of something."

When the British pound was devalued on Nov. 18, its value was diminished in terms of the U.S. dollar from $2.80 to $2.40. The value of the dollar and of the currencies of all other major trading nations remained unchanged. Theoretically, therefore, Britain has gained a significant trade advantage, for her exports will be cheaper (will be sold at $2.40 a pound instead of $2.80) and her imports will be more expensive (will buy only $2.40 a pound instead of $2.80.)

But the position of the dollar is far different. The dollar's value is measured against gold because the U.S. stands ready to convert dollars held by qualified foreign creditors into gold at $35 an ounce on demand. Thus, the dollar is considered as good as gold, is used by nations to settle debts, is the great "reserve currency" supporting the modern monetary system.

We would devalue the dollar by raising the price at which the U.S. Government would buy gold from or sell gold to any qualified foreign government or bank or international organization.

The price of gold has been frozen at $35 an ounce since we last devalued in 1934, 33 years ago. Say we did what France's monetary expert, Jacques Rueff, wants us to do and doubled the price at which we would buy and sell gold to $70.

That would mean the gold value of the dollar would be 1/70 of an ounce instead of 1/35. The dollar would have been devalued in terms of gold by 50 per cent.

Q. WHAT WOULD OTHER NATIONS DO THEN?

A. Within a matter of minutes, they would announce similar devaluations of their currencies against the dollar. They could not do otherwise, for a 50 per cent devaluation would theoretically cut the cost of our exports in half and give us an intolerable trade advantage in world markets.

The net result would be a move by the entire world to new levels of currency values but the relationships between the currencies would remain the same, and that's a crucial point.

The only immediate price change would be that for gold. The value of the gold hoards of metal-owning nations would double. As an illustration, if the dollar were devalued this week, our $12 billion-plus of gold would have a dollar value of $24 billion; France's $5.2 billion of gold would be valued at $10.4 billion. Primary winners would be the gold-producing countries: South Africa, Russia, Canada.

EXCHANGE OF CABLES

TEL AVIV - The afternoon newspaper "Maariv" published the texts of an exchange of telegrams between two sisters, one from Detroit and the second a resident of an Israeli kibbutz. On the first day of the Israel-Arab war a Jewish woman of Detroit sent off a cable to her sister in the kibbutz located on the border of Syria: "You may remain where you are, if necessary, but the children send to us." The sister, a kibbutznik, at first sent no reply but later, during the riots in Detroit, she sent a cable with similar wording: "You may remain where you are, but the children send to us."

TO BE GUEST ARTIST: Felix Fibich, dancer, choreographer, lecturer and authority on Jewish dance, will be the guest artist at the Temple Emanu-El Sisterhood Torah Luncheon and Mathilde Schecter Residence Hall Event on Tuesday in the temple meeting house. Mr. Fibich has toured the United States and Canada. Mrs. Joslin Berry is chairman and Mrs. Milton Levin is co-chairman of the fund-raising event.

New Call For 'Anschluss' Issued By NDP Congress

HANOVER - Echoes of Hitler's old cry for unification of Austria with Germany sounded here recently when 1,500 delegates to the third annual neo-Nazi National Democratic Party congress cheered their newly-elected chairman, Adolf von Thadden, who vowed that the NDP would be "the seeding ground for the rebirth of the German nation."

The opening of the NDP conclave in this Lower Saxony municipality was greeted by some 5,000 demonstrators carrying banners which demanded, "Nazis, get out of our city." A group of trade unionists telegraphed the Bonn Government to urge legal steps against the NDP which, they asserted, was violating the West German Constitution. Later, the number of demonstrators dwindled to 80.

Von Thadden threatened to expel any speaker who might damage it by a display of anti-Semitism or extreme radicalism, it was reported.

This did not prevent von Thadden himself from issuing what amounted to a new call for "anschluss." (In 1938 Hitler occupied Austria and united it with Germany.) Castigating the World War II victorious Allies for "atomizing" the German people and splitting the nation, he demanded to know how an Austrian nation can exist "when we leave the (German-speaking) South Tyrolese to their fate."

Von Thadden claimed that the NDP is the "only opposition party" in West Germany, now that the Christian Democratic Union and the Social Democratic Party have formed a coalition Government.

He drew cheers from the delegates, many of them ex-Nazis, by reminding them that the NDP has won up to 9% of the vote and seats in six of 10 state parliaments during the past year.

At a news conference, von Thadden predicted that his party would gain a minimum of 8% of the national vote and garner 40 seats in the 49-member Bundestag (lower house) in the 1969 Federal elections.

He said the NDP would become the legislature's third strongest party.

The NDP put together, for the first time since its founding in 1964, a draft program to present to voters. Its principal appeal will be to the spirit of German nationalism. It calls for a strong united German national state and army.

Von Thadden, 46, who ran alone for the party's chairmanship and was opposed by only 32 members' votes, urged Germans to use their strength to re-establish a "free fatherland in an independent Europe of free nations" which would be free of foreign troops.

Without stipulating what the nation's boundaries should be, von Thadden hinted that a reunified Germany would embrace not only East and West Germany but also former German provinces in Poland and Russia, the South Tyrol, Czech Sudetenland and Austria.

"We are the rallying point for a rebirth of the German nation," he said, calling for an American military and economic withdrawal from Europe, German withdrawal from NATO, a termination of German reparations payments to Israel, and German self-sufficiency in all fields, United Press International reported.

Von Thadden, scion of a Prussian noble family and an artillery officer in Hitler's Wehrmacht, said that German membership in NATO serves only a United States wish for a European buffer people which would be "overrun and fried in the first phase" of an atomic war while Washington decided how to react.

The party assailed Russia and the U.S. for "brutal use of force" to perpetuate the division of Germany, but von Thadden hailed Soviet cultural, military and scientific progress since the Bolshevik revolution of 1917.

He asserted that West Germany is in a state of "national emergency" because its people have been "exposed to a wave of criminality and sex" that is "corrupting German cultural life."

Von Thadden said the party would seek to win supporters among German youth, disaffected workers in the Ruhr area and members of the lower middle class who are concerned about economic problems in West Germany.

While von Thadden's hand-picked national executive committee expressed opposition, the membership voted to reinstate capital punishment for murder and to introduce castration as punishment for sexual offenders. Later, von Thadden said a bylaws committee had declared the resolution invalid for reasons of parliamentary procedure.

Until the convention von Thadden, a principal figure since the party's founding, was vice-chairman. His election as chairman was assured after he ousted Fritz Thielen, a Bremen cement maker, last summer in a power struggle.

Von Thadden said that one of his principal objectives is to eliminate the Nazi stigma and to project an image of respectable conservatism.

German Rescuers Of Jews Honored

BONN, West Germany - German Christians and Jews gathered in Bonn's Beethoven Hall on Nov. 22 to honor Germany's unsung heroes who rescued Jews from Nazi persecution.

The observance was sponsored by the West Germany Society for Christian-Jewish Cooperation and the Medical Research Foundation of Philadelphia as a reminder that some Germans had "obeyed their conscience" and had risked their own lives to save Jewish fellow-citizens.

The German and American organizations are planning to set up a joint institution to document the deeds of these persons.

Only half a dozen of the Germans who helped Jews survive attended the ceremony. One, introduced by the Israeli Ambassador to Bonn, Asher Ben Natan, was an elderly Bavarian farm wife, Frau Dinsinger.

Frau Dinsinger, wearing a long black dress, looked like an ordinary hausfrau. During World War II, she and her husband sheltered dozens of Jews who had escaped from trains traveling toward the Auschwitz and Treblinka concentration camps, even though death was the penalty for such help.

Frau Dinsinger accepted her scroll of thanks in shy silence and walked off the stage.

Because of people like her, the Israeli Ambassador said, German Jews who survived the Nazi holocaust do not think only of the evil committed by Nazis, but also of the good accomplished by "those who did their duty."

"I believe that it will one day be said of these people: 'They served their country well,'" Mr. Ben Natan declared.

In 1943, one speaker recalled, the Gestapo pronounced Germany "Judenrein"—rid of Jews. But because some Germans hid their Jewish friends and neighbors, supplied them with food and even obtained identity papers for them, several thousand German Jews did survive the Third Reich.

A rabbi who opened the ceremony noted that there was an old Jewish legend saying there are "36 just men" in the world whose goodness enables mankind to avoid catastrophe.

"There were some of these just men in Germany even during the Nazi years," the rabbi said. "Because of them this country continues to live."

CARELESS EDITOR

TORONTO — A Protestant divinity professor has accused the editor of a Protestant church magazine of "carelessly" using Arab propaganda material and anti-Semitic sources in support of the consistently pro-Arab stand taken by the periodical on the Middle East. Prof. David Demson, lecturer in Christian doctrine at Emanuel College here, a beneficiary of the United Church, challenged Rev. A. C. Forrest, editor of the United Church Observer, to reveal the sources of the anti-Israel material it had published.

ELATH INQUIRY

TEL AVIV — Deputy Chief of Staff Chaim Bar-Lev announced here that his official investigation of the sinking of the Israeli destroyer Elath by Egyptian missile craft in international waters off Sinal, on Oct. 21, indicates that "no one in a command position" was to blame. General Bar-Lev, who served as a one-man investigating committee into the disaster, stressed, however, that the Elath's patrol should have been placed on a combat rather than a "routine" basis.

Most Amsterdam Jews
 Give Up Religious Life

AMSTERDAM — A majority of the Jews in Amsterdam have virtually given up all religious practices and never attend a synagogue, although they apparently continue to identify themselves as Jews and believe anti-Semitism exists in Holland, according to a recent report by Dr. Salomon Wynberg, who is preparing a sociological thesis for the State University of Utrecht.

Amsterdam, largest city in the Netherlands, had a Jewish population after World War II of 12,600, compared to 100,000 before 1940.

Dr. Wynberg interviewed 210 Jews over the age of 18 and found that only 36 per cent could read Hebrew; only one per cent attended daily services at Orthodox or Liberal synagogues; 25 per cent attended synagogues only on the High Holy Days; and 74 per cent never attend. He found that 54 per cent do not believe in God, and 76 per cent do not accept the concept of Israel as the "chosen people."

Member Of Al-Fatah Admits Syrian Control

JERUSALEM — A captured Arab terrorist has disclosed, under interrogation, that the Al-Fatah guerrilla band is controlled by the Syrian Government, something which Syria has consistently denied both in Damascus and at the UN.

The guerrilla, code-named Abu Halil, was one of 13 Al-Fatah men captured by the Israeli Security Forces in a gun battle near Nabulus late in September.

"The Syrian Government," he told his interrogators, "took control of Al-Fatah. They came to young people and asked them if they were joining the organization. The Syrians forced people to join... They took us to Al Hami training camp on the road to Beirut. We had seven days' training and learned to use Russian and other weapons."

Algeria Trains Palestine Commandos
 To Fight Guerrilla War In Israel

CAIRO — The leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization announced that Algeria was training Palestinian commandos to wage guerrilla war in Israel and in Arab areas occupied by Israel.

The leader, Ahmed Shukairy, said in an interview at his Cairo headquarters that Algerian officers were training young Palestinians, using Algerian weapons, at a training center in Algeria. He declined to disclose its location.

(In Algiers a spokesman for the Algerian Foreign Ministry declined to comment on the statement by Shukairy.)

After training, he said, the men will enter the Jordan River's west bank area, now under Israeli occupation, from Jordan... but without the cooperation of King Hussein. The King, he added, was not empowered to speak for the Palestinian people when he made conciliatory statements about Israel in the United States last week.

Shukairy would not say how many men were being trained, but he said that other potential guerrillas were being taught at a similar center "somewhere in the Arab world east of the Mediterranean." There have been unconfirmed reports that men were being trained in Syria.

The aim of the Palestinian commandos will be "to make things difficult for the state of Israel and eventually to strangle Israel as a state," he added.

In past years, Shukairy has often threatened general action

APARTHEID ANNOYS

JOHANNESBURG — South African Jewry is distressed by what it considers to be a serious rift developing between the South African Government and Israel over an attack on apartheid voiced by the Israeli delegate in the United Nations Special Political Committee recently.

BARNEY GLAZER

In Hollywood

Than Wyenn is not a Gregory Peck or a Cary Grant but he stays busier than a 65-year-old man watching the mini-skirts go by. Mr. Wyenn, when he isn't acting in television and movies, is drama consultant for the Los Angeles Bureau of Jewish Education and a faculty member of the College of Jewish Studies. He gives generously of his time. Recently, he graciously agreed to be guest entertainer at a meeting of Temple Ahavat Shalom Sisterhood in Granada Hills in the San Fernando Valley.

Mr. Wyenn has appeared in featured and costarring television roles in UNCLE, Run For Your Life, Big Valley and I Spy. In films, he currently is costarring in "Sullivan's Empire," and will appear in "Rosie" with Rosalind Russell and "The Jolly Pink Jungle" with James Garner.

The distinguished Jewish actor has authored numerous articles and plays for children, as well as a textbook on the "Use of Creative Drama in the Teaching of the Bible." He has made a particular art of interpreting the fabric of Jewish folk literature.

One of his favorite presentations is a program titled, "Turning the Pages of Jewish Humor." It ranges from Jewish classics to selections from the satiric theatre.

SCANNING our Hollywood trade magazines, The Hollywood Reporter has a Catholic film columnist and a Jewish television columnist. Variety employs a Jewish film columnist and two Jewish television columnists.

The Hollywood Reporter's tv columnist, affable and erudite Hank Grant, of Sephardic extraction, recently reported that Hans Gudegast of ABC-TV's Rat Patrol accounted for himself against the American Nazi Party with commendable acumen. Born in Germany, Hans plays the Nazi officer but has no bond with Hitler's doctrine.

My good friend Hank related that a member of the American Nazi Party bullied his way into Gudegast's hotel room in Carmel, where the actor was locationing for the tv series, and welcomed him like a lifelong buddy. Said Grant, "Gudegast was so outraged, he threw the bum out of his room - but bodily."

On a previous occasion, I had duly noted herein that the German actor is a member of the Macca-bean soccer team. When one of the players on the local German team asked Hans why he was participating with the Jewish team instead of theirs, Gudegast replied, "It's the very least I can do to atone for my people's sins."

SCREEN GEMS' Vice President Jackie Cooper announced the appointment of Larry Rosen as a studio producer. Mr. Rosen is making his first studio association on the West Coast. For the past three years he was producer of the Mike Douglas Show in Philadelphia. Prior to that, he was associate producer of the show in 1961 at the time of the show's origin in Cleveland, Ohio.

DURING production of a recent Israeli film, one of the biggest expenses was created by the cast's and crew's demands for celery tonic and soft drinks. Under the producer's deal, each military extra explicitly demanded and received three bottles a day while filming scenes in Gaza. Said the producer, Avraham Deshe, "Normal budget figures for production usually create no serious problem but the cost of soda pop and tank fuel - oy vay!"

Two German actors, Peter vanEyck and Robert Hoffmann, are the only Germans cast in the new Israeli film, "The Milkman and His Seven Daughters," based on "Fiddler on the Roof." Production is under way at Tel Aviv.

IZVESTIA PRAISES EGYPT

MOSCOW — The Soviet Government newspaper Izvestia has attacked Israel for its artillery destruction of Port Suez refinery facilities. It praised the Egyptian sinking of the Israeli destroyer Elath, calling it a "pirate ship" that had entered Egyptian waters.

Violinist Menuhin Recalls N.Y. Debut, Discusses Hindu Music, Health Foods

NEW YORK - Yehudi Menuhin reminisced recently about his debut as an orchestral soloist 40 years ago in this city. The Knight Commander of the Order of British Empire was 11 1/2 years old when he played the Beethoven Violin Concerto at the Mecca Temple (now the City Center) on Nov. 25, 1927.

Interviewed in his hotel room by Donal Henahan, the 51-year-old former child prodigy was shoeless, his legs tucked under him in one of the 84 postures of Hatha yoga. At one point his wife Diana bounded into the room to complain that because Mr. Menuhin has insisted on carrying along 100 pounds of health foods as excess baggage on the flight from England, "I had to leave clothes home, and freeze so that man can have his oats and long grains."

He spoke of his performance in 1927: "I remember very distinctly so much about those times." The orchestra, the New York Symphony, was conducted by Fritz Busch (it was merged with the New York Philharmonic in 1928). "I remember that before the second concert I was supposed to take an afternoon rest in a bedroom with my two sisters. Instead of napping, I just talked all the time. I felt happy and confident. Of course, I was a veteran by then, having played often in San Francisco and twice in Paris."

Mr. Menuhin's first New York recital had taken place nearly two years before his orchestral debut, on Jan. 18, 1926, in the old Manhattan Opera House.

Many New Yorkers vividly remember the 1926 concert, including a few hundred thousand who now are convinced that they were present in the 3,000-seat hall that night. "Yes," they tell you fondly, "I'll never forget that blue-eyed, blond boy in those short velvet pants. The way he phrased, the slow movement..."

On a table lay a Guaranius del Gesu violin (a 1736 instrument which Mr. Menuhin regularly plays although it is owned by a friend). Open on a music stand was the Berg Violin Concerto, its notes barely discernible under geologic layers of inky annotations and musical graffiti. Mr. Menuhin was working on the difficult 32-year-old serial score for a forthcoming Chicago performance.

"While it has strong weaknesses, you might say, the work has gotten under my skin. I finally have come to enjoy playing it despite my intellectual opposition to the 12-tone system."

The artist denounced the new airline rules that forbid musicians to carry their precious instruments aboard as hand luggage ("it is unthinkable to be molested in this way by inflexible bureaucrats"). He recommended a book called "The Light of Yoga," by his favorite guru, B.S.K. Iyengar of Bombay (it is especially good on Hatha, the purely physical side of yoga, without which no one can hope to enter the spiritual kingdom of Raja yoga).

He counseled against eating sugar (it rots the teeth); sugar substitutes ("they produce cancer, that has been proved"); soft drinks and canned foods. "I don't want to give the impression I live on caviar—I can eat a good meal of potatoes and cabbage. But I prefer oats or wheat, unbleached."

When traveling, Mr. Menuhin said, he likes to "eat the food indigenous to the country." In New York, for example, he mentioned a tasty meal at a nearby Chinese restaurant, Tiki Village on East 56th Street.

Mr. Menuhin said such interest as yoga and Indian music are his ways to try to enter deeper into his own culture. He is still a United States citizen (and thus cannot call himself Sir Yehudi, although he was knighted in England), and has great faith in this country, which he finds on this visit greatly changed.

"Coming back now, after even a few months away, is like meeting a young man who has passed into puberty and has just fallen in love."

"The country seems more human now. The United States now knows riots, it knows there are no simple answers. In the last two years I have noticed that the United States has changed immensely. I see it most in the young, whom I find extremely sympathetic. The young are really showing us up."

Moslem, Jewish Affinities Discussed At Conservative Leaders' Convention

KIAMESHA LAKE, N.Y. - Moslems and Jews would understand one another better if they met more frequently to examine their affinities and differences, according to two religious leaders who shared a platform at the convention of the United Synagogue of America.

Dr. Muhammad Abdul Rauf, director of the Islamic Center, New York City, said: "When you come together you realize you are a human being. There is a common call of understanding each other's cause, religious values and aspirations, as well as the extent of our differences. One cannot live in isolation."

Rabbi Henry Siegman, executive vice president of the Synagogue Council of America, said: "If there is ever to occur a genuine reconciliation between Arabs and Jews, as surely there must and will, then the basis of this reconciliation must be the shared religious values and the legacy of a cultural symbiosis unique in history."

Their exchange came at the closing session of the biennial assembly of the coordinating body of 815 Conservative congregations in the United States.

Rabbi Siegman's organization is the representative body of the rabbinic and congregational arms of the three branches of Judaism.

During a question and answer period, Dr. Rauf, in a veiled reference to the Arab-Israeli tensions in the Middle East said that the Jews belong to a "nation of great tradition and a great faith, yet we're unfortunately subjected to bitter experiences and sufferings for which we Moslems were not responsible."

"I appeal to you," he said, "to extend your sympathy to all those who suffer. We fully sympathize with your suffering and I hope you will sympathize with ours."

Proceeds of the sale will go to the BBOYO Staff Fund and the International AZA and BGG service funds. More information may be obtained by calling Miss Pact at 461-6784.

In an interview before his address Dr. Rauf emphasized that he spoke as a spiritual leader and not as an Arab. He has appeared before Jewish audiences on frequent and formal occasions but not before such a large representative body. He said the Moslems were urged "to be peaceful and not initiate hostility," adding that "only when one is transgressed he is given the legitimate right to defend himself."

Jews, Christians and Moslems, he added, are all given the common title, "Ahlu Kitah (people of the book)."

On this point, he said that "Moslems are also commanded not to argue with other people of the book except in the best manner and to say to them: 'We believe in God and in that which has been revealed to us, and our God and yours is one.'"

Emanuel G. Scoblionko, president of the World Council of Synagogues, who presided, referred to periods of strife between both Islam and Judaism, but said that had there been close and determined efforts "to nourish a sense of comradeship understanding between us, the difficulties in the Middle East might well have been alleviated."

Scarsdale, N.Y., was re-elected president of the United Synagogue. Rabbinic leaders expressed sharp concern over what they described as "the dangerous alienation" of Jewish youth from religious and secular life and their joining the hippie movement in greater numbers throughout the country.

Jewish hippies have not only rejected the religious and moral ideals but have also concluded that their parents do not believe them either, according to those who have worked with them.

In describing "the alarming number of Jewish young people" who have deserted traditional Jewish life and joined the hippie movement, one rabbi pointed out that conservative figures indicate a Jewish population of 20 to 25 per cent of the hippie population of 5,000 to 6,000 in the Haight-Ashbury community.

Other significant causes that have been contributing factors in the alienation of the Jewish youth are the decline of the family and particularly the father's role in it, and the competitive and the depersonalizing elements of today's technological society that the hippie movement repudiates.

Jewish youths argue that the synagogue does not speak up on social issues and that synagogue activity does not sufficiently promote religious piety.

GERMANY'S HEROES
BONN — Germans who rescued Jews, the unsung heroes of the Nazi era in Germany, were honored by West German Christians and Jews at a gathering in Beethoven Hall here recently. Israel's Ambassador Asher Ben Natan, United States Ambassador George McGee, West German Minister Carlo Schmidt and Kurt R. Grossman, an American active in the reparations program, were among those present. The observance was sponsored by the West German Society for Christian-Jewish Cooperation and the Medical Research Foundation of Philadelphia as a reminder that some Germans had risked their lives to save Jewish fellow-citizens.

RUTH'S BEAUTY SALON

For every type of hair - normal, dry, or oily - there are specialized shampoos. Only one that is plainly labeled for your hair type is right for you. "Any old shampoo" won't do. Bar soap, never! Specialized, a shampoo not only cleanses and brightens your hair efficiently, it also assists in conditioning your scalp. And you must always consider your scalp in relation to your hair. It is to the hair, what garden soil is to a flower. Poor soil, as every gardener's daughter knows, brings forth inferior blossoms.

Just as you need certain kinds of shampoo for different types of hair, you also need special haircuts for easy management. Call RUTH'S BEAUTY SALON, 920 Reservoir Ave., Tel. 467-5509. Complete Beauty Service. Make Your Holiday Appointments Now.

British Ask Why Israel Did Not Occupy Canal

LONDON - "Why did the Israelis hold back from occupying the Suez Canal even though they had all the opportunities to do so, both by virtue of their military victory as well as politically?" This question was posed to the London correspondent of Haaretz by influential English circles.

In the opinion of these circles, Israel committed a grave tactical blunder in permitting Nasser to retain the most important instrument which he used as a device for blackmail against the world. The same Britishers further contend that Britain's present policy in the Israel-Arab conflict does not stem from pro-Arab sentiments but is a product of important economic factors related to the huge losses incurred as a result of the closing of the Suez Canal. The occupation of the Canal by Israel would have brought about a complete reversal of the British position.

Israel is thus being charged with a sort of double bookkeeping: On the one hand she refrains from taking any steps toward a definitive solution of the problems of the Middle East, and on the other hand, she refuses to reckon with the problems faced by England. These circles maintain that Israel is now a big power and must therefore assume the responsibilities as such. In short, she must reckon with the problems of other countries instead of demanding from the world to consider only her problems.

Eshkol's Cabinet Replaces Rabin

JERUSALEM — The Israeli Cabinet selected a new Chief of Staff of the armed forces to replace Maj. Gen. Itzhak Rabin, who is to become the next Ambassador to the United States.

The new chief is Brig. Gen. Chaim Bar-Lev, a veteran of the Palmach, the striking force of the Jewish underground during the British mandate. He had been Deputy Chief of Staff.

General Bar-Lev, who is 43 years old, was born in Austria and emigrated to Israel in 1939. He will take command of the Israeli armed forces on Jan. 1. He holds a master's degree in economics from Columbia University, which he earned in 1963.

Segal's Column Answered: 'Protest Because We Must'

In response to Mr. Segal's article regarding the efficacy of mass gatherings and protests against Russian ill treatment of Jews, may I quote the following tale as recorded in an address by Elie Wiesel in CONSERVATIVE JUDAISM, Spring 1967, page 48.

"One day a Tzadik came to Sodom. He knew what Sodom was, so he came to save it from sin, from destruction. He preached to the people. 'Please do not be murderers, do not be thieves. Do not be silent and do not be indifferent.' He went on preaching day after day, maybe even picketing. But no one listened. He was not discouraged. He went on preaching for years. Finally someone asked him, 'Rabbi, why do you do that? Don't you see it is no use?' He said, 'I know it is no use, but I must. And I will tell you why: In the beginning I thought I had to protest and to shout in order to change them. I have given up this hope. Now I know I must picket and scream and shout so that they should not change me.'"

Yes, we must protest lest we forget.

Seymour Krieger

Blumbergs Concerned . . .

sions of my being Jewish, realized my relationship to the land of Israel and to the modern state and to Jews of other communities."

The assistant rabbi participated in the ecumenical service at the state house as a representative of the Jewish community, because he felt it was something a rabbi should be involved in. He is equally careful, however, not to participate in any organization which he feels is anti-Jewish or anti-Israel.

Temple Beth El is the first civilian post for Rabbi Blumberg, who last July became chaplain at the VA hospital, which only has about six Jewish patients at any one time. A graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, he was ordained in 1961 and awarded the M.A. in Hebrew Letters by Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Cincinnati. He met Mrs. Blumberg while in chaplain's school in 1962, and he served in El Paso, Texas, as an Army chaplain for two years.

She took a course at Hebrew Union College in New York and at Columbia University under joint auspices for a bachelor's degree in Jewish Studies, since she planned to go into youth work. Mrs. Blumberg is a painter and studies occasionally at Tonoff Gallery. An abstract and a street scene add color to her restful living room, and an impressive charcoal stands on an easel in the dining room.

Asked what is the most important job of a rabbi's wife, both the Blumbergs came up with the same answer: to be a good supportive wife to her husband. He added that she has two other duties, "to be a good mother and to be herself. She does those things within the community and congregation which she thinks are important. She teaches on Sunday mornings as she has a talent for it and enjoys it. She can't join a lot of daytime activities as she is involved with the children."

Paula Blumberg called it a "real myth" that having young children fairly close together is exhausting. "The dividends just flow in all the time, the constant joy of watching them grow, watching their reaction to their environment as it becomes more real to them."

Besides being involved in every aspect of the congregation and active in the community, Rabbi Blumberg also does much work with non-Jews converting to Judaism. Most people interested in conversion gravitate to a Reform rabbi, he remarked, but he works "very hard to make a person a Jew rather than a Reform Jew."

The Blumbergs' concern for many dimensions of need, and their own need to be involved in the local and wider community, are apparent in the organizations to which they give their time. In the rabbi's case, it cannot be construed as "leisure time," for he does not believe a rabbi can legitimately divide his hours into a neat mosaic of work time and leisure time. This Wednesday they will be at meetings of the East Side Neighborhood Council and the R. I. Educational Childbirth Association; and always they are involved with the Committee of Responsibility.

United Fund Thanks R.I. Herald For Aid

On behalf of the more than 20,000 volunteers who worked for the 1967 United Fund campaign, we express our sincere gratitude to your newspaper for its outstanding contribution to the campaign's success. Your kind assistance during the campaign and throughout the year did much to increase public understanding of the Fund's basic, constant goal: the support of the 100 health, welfare and youth agencies that need United Fund support so they can serve more than 436,000 persons each year. On their behalf, we thank you very much.

1/2 c Sugar
1/2 Lemon, juice only
1/2 c Ketchup
1 T Rice, uncooked
6 Peppers, large
6 Tomatoes, large
2 lbs. Hamburg
4 slices White Bread, soaked in water
2 Eggs

1 Onion, grated
2 t Seasoned Salt
1/2 t Salt
1/2 t Pepper

Dice the first three ingredients and saute in shortening until brown. Sprinkle lightly with salt and pepper and transfer to frying or roasting pan large enough to accommodate the 12 peppers and tomatoes. To the sauteed vegetables, add the water, sugar, lemon juice and ketchup. Scoop out the center of the 6 tomatoes and add to the above. Bring to a boil.

Drain excess water from soaked bread. Add the hamburger, grated onion, seasoned salt, salt, pepper and eggs - mix thoroughly, add rice and again mix well.

Core the peppers and fill with the hamburger mixture, using balance of mixture to fill tomatoes. Place in boiling liquid and cook, covered, on low heat about 3 hours.

APRICOT-CHEESE MOLD

2 qt. mold, greased
1 T unflavored Gelatin
2 1/4 c Cold Water
2 c Apricot pulp
1/4 c Apricot Juice
2 c Cottage Cheese
1/4 t Salt
1/2 c chopped Nuts

Sprinkle 1 tablespoon gelatin over the cold water. When set, dissolve over bowl of hot water and add 1 2/3 cup pulp. Stir thoroughly and pour into mold. Refrigerate until firm.

About 1 hour later, sprinkle remaining gelatin over apricot juice. When set, dissolve over bowl of hot water - and remaining pulp, cottage cheese, salt and nuts. Pour over first mixture that is firmly set - chill.
