Day School Principal

RABBI AKIVA EGOZI

Archie Smith, president of the Providence Hebrew Day School, this week announced the appointment of Rabbi Akiva Egozi as principal of the school.

Rabbi Egozi, who was born in Poland, received his teacher's certificate from the Teacher's Seminary at Kovno, and his rabbinical degree from the Rabbinical Seminary of Kletsk.

The Rabbi was formerly principal of the Tiphereth Zion Educational Center of St. Louis and director of the Kinnereth Day Camp in that city. He is well-known as an author, having contributed articles to both the Jewish and the American press. He is the author of a recently published book titled "Orath Baophel."

Rabbi Egozi is married and the father of a five-year-old daughter.

Registration is now being held at the Hebrew Day School. The term begins on Sept. 8.

Expect Flood of U. S. Capital to Israel Under Pact

TEL AVIV—A flood of American investments in Israel's industry was foreseen here following the agreement reached between the United States and the Israel government, under which American private investors in the development of Israel will get their money back in dollars and will receive American protection against losses from possible expropriation.

Government circles here said that the new agreement indicates that the U. S. government has confidence in Israel's economic future and regards the Jewish state as a safe place for American investments. "It is now expected that the new agreement will greatly contribute to the promotion of investments by American individuals and companies in Israel," a government spokesman stated.

In Washington, a spokesman for the Israel Embassy hailed the new agreement as representing "a definite encouragement to American investors in initiating or joining investment undertakings in Israel."

The agreement guarantees American investors conversion of up to 10 per cent of their investment annually in the form of profits, dividends or repatriation of capital. The pact is similar to those concluded previously between the United States and Austria, Denmark, Greece, France, Italy and Norway.

For a small "premium" investments will be guaranteed in dollars out of Mutual Security Act funds.

IRISH GET SPANISH ONIONS
DUBLIN — The "Tamar," first Israel ship to call at an Irish port, this week put into Dublin with a cargo of Spanish onions.

AJC Flays Resort Discrimination

BOSTON—The New England regional office of the American Jewish Congress has submitted to the New Hampshire Legislative Council a draft for legislation to outlaw discrimination in resorts of that state, Attorney Abraham T. Alper, president of the region, announced. For some time there has been wholesale discrimination in New Hampshire resorts. In the resort area of Hampton Beach there is an owners' covenant whereby Jews are being kept out of the beach area and find it almost impossible to either buy or rent summer cottages.

Ethical Code for 'Mushroom' Services

LOS ANGELES — "Mushroom synagogues" functioning during the High Holidays were condemned here this week as "a detriment to the Jewish community" by Herman Bachrack, chairman of a sub-committee of the Community Relations Committee which was set up to deal with the question.

Bachrack denounced advertising and publicity methods employed by some of these groups as "highly undignified and not in keeping with the solemnity of the High Holidays." He said his committee had drawn up a code of ethics for advertising and publicity and was working out arrangements with established synagogues "to make it possible for every Jewish person to worship during the High Holidays without having to go to a mushroom synagogue service."

Seek FEPC Policy in Newspaper Ads

YOUNGSTOWN—The Fair Employment Practice Committee of the City of Youngstown this week called upon local newspapers to consider a fair employment policy statement barring advertisements which "state either an unwillingness to employ or a preference for employing applicants of a certain race, religion or national origin, or which ask for this information." Committee director Richard Anliot told publishers that "the taking of help-wanted ads is a process in which newspapers have much influence concerning fair employment practices."

Bureau of Education Head Offers 10-Point Program

Stan Getz, Leading Jazz Figure, Packs A Lifetime Into 11 Years

By SYD COHEN

The kid was 14 years old, and he clutched his saxophone under his arm as he watched Jack Teagarden put his orchestra through its paces at a rehearsal in New York.

It wasn't much of a rehearsal, however. Teagarden's regular sax player had not appeared, and was holding things up. After a while the leader's patience gave out, and he approached the kid who had come up to watch the rehearsal. It didn't take long to determine that the youngster knew how to handle his saxophone, and so he was asked to sit in and take the place of the missing musician.

That errant sax player never did show up, and Stan Getz became a member of the Teagarden organization—at the tender age of 14.

Tops In Jazz World

That was 11 years ago. Today Stan Getz is a name that is just about tops in the world of jazz. Stan is appearing all this week at the Celebrity Club, which in its own right has established itself as the leading club of its kind in the nation. Variety and Billboard, leading night club and theatrical magazines—the bibles of show business—say so, and so do the nationally famous artists who play at Celebrity Club.

Getz is here with his own five piece "combo," consisting of his sax and four rhythm instruments—piano, bass, guitar and drums.

Not the least of the members of the Stan Getz entourage is his beautiful blond wife, who accompanies Stan on tour, although she is not a working member of the family. Married while very young, the couple look hardly old enough to be the parents of two sons, ages four and one; but they are. The junior Getz boys are home in New York with Grandma. Incidentally, the Jewish artist was born in Philadelphia, but lived in New York until he left to go a-touring.

Stan Getz at the age of 25 is a veteran of such musical outfits as those of Benny Goodman, Stan Kenton, Woody Herman, Jimmy Dorsey, Gene Krupa, Herbie Fields, Phil Harris, Buddy Morrow and Randy Brooks. In California he played with Harris on the Jack Benny Show and with Kenton on the Bob Hope Show.

In addition, Stan has sat in with several small combos such as the one he now heads, as well as musical organizations like the NBC staff orchestra, with which he served three months until last week. He has crossed the country often, and has played in the nation's major cities. Recently he has commuted from New York evenings to make appearances in Atlantic City, Washington, and other cities and resort centers.

Popular Throughout World

Getz' recordings, which are sold throughout the world, have made him popular in such far-off places as Sweden, Trinidad, South America, Japan and all of Europe. In Sweden, which he visited last year, he was met at the airport by a delegation of no less than 500 Swedish jazz enthusiasts. He performed there in a series of concerts with native orchestras.

Japanese jazz musicians have gone so far as to copy Stan's original style, while in the calypso-land of Trinidad the record shops do a steady business with customers who come in and ask for the latest platters by "Stan Getz."

In Paris, where negro jazz players usually hold sway and it is absolutely unusual for a white musician to win much favor, Stan Getz placed third in the latest Jazz popularity poll.

Among his better known records are "Early Autumn" and "Summer Sequence," an album, for Capitol records, and "Four Brothers" for Columbia. Right now, his unit has a contract with Mercury records to cut 20 sides, or ten records, annually. Stan turns these out in five recording sessions. His recordings are made only when he and his boys come up with something they like.

"Smooth" Jazz

The Stan Getz combo, formed three years ago, plays a smooth brand of jazz—a softer jazz, Stan says, than you normally hear from a jazz band. He interprets jazz as a music all its own, and not merely a rhythm. He and his boys are "strictly spontaneous" and what they play and how they play it depends on the type of spontaneous mood they find themselves in.

The unit makes four appearances nightly at the Celebrity Club, and is on for 40 minutes out of each hour.

The foregoing should not be taken as an indication that the course has been smooth sailing for Stan Getz since his youthful start 11 years ago. As a fact, he ran into trouble as soon as he went on tour with the Jack Teagarden unit.

Chugging along behind on a relentless trail came the New York truant officer. Object—to locate the 14-year-old sax player and bring him back to the public school classrooms. The "law" caught up with the "fugitive" in St. Louis.

The problem was solved when Teagarden, reluctant to let his youthful prodigy get away, for-

New Director Assumes Post

Next Tuesday, Sept. 2, may well be a red letter day in the annals of the greater Providence community for it marks the official opening of the new Bureau of Jewish Education.

On Tuesday morning, Rabbi George Ende, nationally-known New York educational consultant who has been appointed executive director, will figuratively hang on the door of the Bureau's modern offices in the Strand Building in downtown Providence a sign reading: "Open for Business."

Actually, Rabbi Ende won't be wasting any time waiting for "business" to come through the door. He has before him—ready to implement—a detailed program containing numerous recommendations stemming from the far-reaching educational survey completed last Spring by a community-wide group sponsored by the General Jewish Committee of Providence.

10 Point Program

And since his appointment was confirmed last June by the survey's planning committee, Rabbi Ende has met twice with groups of local educational authorities and has set up a number of future meetings. In addition, he has drafted a suggested 10-point program embodying the pertinent highlights of the survey's recommendations.

Arriving in town earlier in the week, Rabbi Ende promptly settled his family in a Providence apartment and then proceeded to put his office in shape. Shortly he plans to visit the week-day and Sunday schools in a get-acquainted tour.

To Present By-Laws

Meanwhile, Joseph W. Ress, chairman of the survey's planning committee, announced this week that a formal set of by-laws for the new Bureau would shortly be presented to the GJC's Board of Directors for approval. In addition, a nominating committee will be appointed to propose names for the Bureau's board of trustees. An educational advisory committee—consisting of rabbis, school principals, and educational authorities also will be named to work with Rabbi Ende in a technical capacity, Ress declared.

Statement on Education

In a statement issued this week to the Herald, Rabbi Ende emphasized: "Jewish education concerns itself with all aspects of life which contribute to the development of a wholesome Jewish personality. It is not the monopoly of the young, though most of its organized effort is directed toward them.

"Nor is it merely the responsibility of the community. It is rather a set of activities which give meaning and flavor to the full range of Jewish communal life. No element or age level is beyond its scope—just as no one segment of the population lives or learns in isolation, removed from the influence or aspirations of all others."

Rabbi Ende outlined the following proposed 10-point program which, he said, would constitute the foundation of both the Bureau's short-term and long-range activities:

1) Assisting existing educational agencies—schools, clubs, organizations, etc.—to improve their programs through guidance, "in-service" courses for professionals, introduction of new materials and evaluation of results achieved.

2) Coordination of school life in the community through the adoption of uniform calendars and administrative procedures.

3) Encouraging increased enrollment and a longer stay at school on the part of pupils who commence their education at an earlier age.

4) Establishment of a library of materials and literature for professionals and laymen.

5) Interpreting to parents and the community in general the function of the Jewish school, the character and potentialities of each type of school, and the vital role of the parent in the child's education.

6) Creation of a healthy professional atmosphere in which competent teachers and principals can pursue the highest goals of their calling confident of community respect and security through establishment of a code of fair practices and standards of professional conduct.

7) Sponsoring inter-school activities on a community scale.

8) Setting up standards for all types of education, as well as the instruments to measure achievement and the raising of learning levels.

9) Consideration of new facilities, such as a high school, where a need exists.

10) Reaching out to nearby vicinities that do not have adequate educational facilities by assisting in the setting up of classes or arrangement of transportation to enable their pupils to attend existing local schools.

Program Limited

"The Bureau is a service agency," Rabbi Ende stressed, "ready to be of assistance wherever a need may arise. It avows its interest in all problems and projects in the field of Jewish education. As these are brought to its attention, its programs will unfold and begin to take shape.

"At the outset, its program will be limited, for it is only beginning to take its first steps. But the larger goals listed above will always be kept in sight—and new ones may be added if time presents new needs.

"In essence, the Bureau's aim is constant improvement of all the instruments of education. The center of its interest is the pupil who deserves the best facilities and training the community can provide. Its hope is that it may play a significant role in enriching the life of the greater Providence Jewish community through fostering an abiding interest in Jewish culture and a warm attachment to the faith and institutions of Judaism."

DISCUSSION GROUP SPEAKER

The Jewish Community Center Young Adult Discussion Group will present David Laurent, of the Music Department of Brown University, Tuesday at 8:15 P. M. at the Center. Laurent will discuss opera trends from 1600 to modern times with illustrating records. Dancing will follow. Co-chairmen are Thomas Pearlman and Paul Litwin.

Kane To Head GJC Initial Gifts

The campaign structure of the forthcoming General Jewish Committee fund-raising drive took solid shape this week with the appointment of Sydney A. Kane as chairman of the Initial Gifts Committee.

Kane, Providence businessman who served in various capacities in all previous GJC campaigns, will now be heading the largest fund-producing division in the drive's framework. The appointment was announced by Alvin A. Sopkin, GJC president.

In accepting this appointment, Kane stated: "I have just returned from Israel and even though my stay there was a very brief one it was truly a thrilling experience for me. Miracles have been accomplished in the short time since the State was established. It is difficult for me to describe the thrill that was mine when I set foot on the soil of Israel and when the hostess at the airport greeted us with a hearty "Shalom." It is true that there are plenty of problems, but I believe that these will be overcome with our help and support. The cable from Al Sopkin requesting me to serve as Initial Gifts Chairman for the GJC campaign reached me just after I left Israel. I notified him of my acceptance immediately upon my return to Providence realizing that we all must do our share in this inspiring undertaking. I look forward to the cooperation of all in the community."

SYDNEY A. KANE

Kane, who is a vice-president of the General Jewish Committee, is also chairman of the organization's Special Finance Committee and led the successful cash collection week earlier this year. It is his plan to begin immediately with the organization of the Initial Gifts Committee in preparation for the campaign, which will get under way in the early fall.

Stan Getz

 mally adopted Stan and took him under his own parental wing. Satisfied with the arrangements, and assured that Stan would get his schooling, the truant officer retreated to New York, and a budding career started to blossom.

After a year and a half, Getz left the Teagarden organization and settled in California, not to leave until three years later when Benny Goodman, who knows musical class when he sees and hears it, put in a call to the Coast and bid for the youth's services. Stan came East and played with the King of Swing for eight months.

After that it was back to California and the formation of a small unit of his own. Then Woody Herman formed a new band, and Getz joined him. Stan says that his year-and-a-half association with the Herman band helped him more than all the others. When he left Woody, Stan went out on his own, and there he has been since.

This week's appearance at Celebrity Club is likely to be Stan's last in these parts for some time. Next week he heads for the Coast, where he will make appearances in Los Angeles and San Francisco. After that he probably will go to Europe for appearances in Paris.

Upon his return to the U. S., Getz hopes to form a big band of his own.

In view of his past accomplishments, it is easy to assume that the sax star will lead a busy, interesting and hectic life wherever he goes.

FOODS to Remember by LEAH LEONARD
 A J.P. FEATURE

During recent months we have been asked about "meatless" dishes that would be nourishing enough or robust appetites. Further discussion brought out the need for "quick-easy" meals, especially for warm weather when kitchen time should be cut to a minimum. Here are some suggestions for meals that can serve adequately during the "torrid" days of August for either luncheon or dinner. You'll find them easy to prepare in advance and chill in the refrigerator, or serve them on short notice with equal ease.

- SALMON SALAD
- 1 tall can red salmon
 - 1 tablespoon onion juice or grated onion
 - 2 hard cooked eggs
 - 1 tablespoon prepared mustard or horseradish
 - 1 tablespoon lemon juice, fresh or canned.
 - ¼ cup salad oil or softened butter
 - 1 green pepper, diced fine
 - ½ cup finely diced celery, leaves included
 - Lettuce, chicory, escarole
 - Green pepper rings for garnish
 - Sliced cucumber, tomatoes and tomatoes as desired.
 - Parsley sprigs for garnish.

Drain the salmon and remove skin and bone. Flake with a fork, mix with the onion juice and let stand while preparing the next ingredients. Mash the eggs with a fork and add mustard or horseradish, lemon juice, oil or softened butter, mixing well to a paste. Add the green pepper and celery, then combine with the fish. Chill or serve immediately on a bed of greens. Garnish to your heart's content and the extent of your food budget. Serves six.

Eat plenty of fresh tomatoes, unadorned or elaborate salad versions. Unless you have a health reason for omitting them from your diet. They are an excellent source of Vitamin C.

Serve less cake during hot weather. Substitute fresh fruits for other desserts. It takes less time and trouble to slice peaches and pears than to mix and bake a cake. And it's easier on the budget! To say nothing about the added health fruits give young and old.

BOND-A-MONTH

Josephine Hull in New Play at Matunuck

The new Josephine Hull vehicle, "Mistress Liggins," a new comedy by Albert Dickason opens at the Theatre - By - The - Sea, Monday night. This production is an addition to the regular season at the seaside theatre and is playing its only pre-Broadway engagement before the producer, Anthony Brady Farrell, opens it in New York.

Written as a starring vehicle for Miss Hull, the author is Albert Dickason, head of the University of Bridgeport's Drama Department.

The comedy is built around the revelation by an elderly couple that their long marriage was one in spirit only, never made legal. This comes out on the eve of their granddaughter's wedding to a socially prominent young heir, while a son-in-law is running for mayor and another son is a prominent minister in the community. Under pressure to marry, the quaint old-timers rebel and plan to marry two old friends. Events are thrown into a merry whirl especially when they liberate the inmates of an old age home.

The cast includes Burton Mallory, Edward Binns, Honey Waldman, Frances Maddux, Reynolds Evans, Tom Reynolds, Amelle Barleon and Edmund Hall. Bert Schwartz, the theatre's resident designer created the setting and John Larson directed the entire production.

Limit Attendance at Holiday Services

During the last several years, the synagogue at the Home has proved a popular place during the High Holy Days. The atmosphere surrounding the services, the devout and serious manner in which they are conducted, have proved very popular with the general public.

Meanwhile, conditions at the Home have become increasingly crowded—so much so, that the Home regretfully must now limit the number of non-residents who would like to attend the holiday services.

This year, admission to these services will be by ticket only; and those who would like to attend are urged to make their applications early, at the Home office, 99 Hillside Avenue.

Perpetual Memorial Tablets

At this time of the year our thoughts turn to our departed dear ones, and to give deeper meaning to precious remembrance, we perform deeds of kindness and help. The Jewish Home for the Aged of Rhode Island offers through its Memorial Fund opportunity to perpetuate the memory of loved ones through the purchase of a bronze memorial tablet in our Synagogue.

On Yahrzeit dates the Home, through the lips of the aged residents, renders homage to the memory of your loved ones by saying Kaddish and Special Prayers. Also, an individual lamp, attached directly to the tablet, is kept burning from sunset to sunset. Four times a year, during Yiskor Services, the lamps are lighted in commemoration of their death, in accordance with Jewish traditions.

By inscribing the name of loved ones on our Memorial Tablets, you not only perpetuate their memory in a lasting way, but you help to sustain and bring comfort to the aged in our midst. Thus, the memory of your dear ones continues to be a blessing as their life was a benediction.

Theodore Herzl and Religion

The religious conflicts in Israel arouse speculation as to the attitude that dominated the thinking of Dr. Theodore Herzl, founder of Zionism, on the subject.

Dr. Herzl kept in mind the freedom of all who desired to pursue their religious sentiments. He even thought about the rights of Freethinkers. Here is what he wrote in "The Jewish State":

"I do not want to hurt anyone's religious sensibility by words which might be wrongly interpreted.

"I shall merely refer quite briefly to the Mohammedan pilgrimages to Mecca, the Catholic pilgrimages to Lourdes, and to many other spots whence men return comforted by their faith, and to the holy Hock at Trier. Thus we shall also create a center for the deep religious needs of our people. Our ministers will understand us first, and will be with us in this.

"We shall let every man find salvation 'over there' in his own particular way. Above and before all we shall make room for the immortal band of our Freethinkers, who are continually making new conquests for humanity.

"No more force will be exercised on any one than is necessary for the preservation of the State and order; and the requisite force will not be arbitrarily defined by one or more shifting authorities; it will be fixed by iron laws."

Disraeli's Background and Loyalties

The Eminent Statesman's 'Sense of Triumph of Race'

A score or more of biographical sketches of Benjamin Disraeli have been published, in voluminous tomes or in brochures, since the great statesman's death more than 70 years ago.

But it took all these years for the publication of a biographical sketch angled specifically at the Jewish heritage, interests and devotions of Great Britain's colorful figure; and it has fallen to the lot of Dr. Cecil Roth, the eminent Anglo-Jewish scholar and writer, to be the author of such a volume.

Dr. Roth's "Benjamin Disraeli: Earl of Beaconsfield," published by Philosophical Library (15 E. 40th, NY 16), serves a most interesting purpose. It is the most complete record of the "Jewish trends" in Disraeli's life. It is the result of deep and thorough research into all available records and into material hitherto unpublicized.

Disraeli's pride in his heritage is painted in glowing colors in this new biography. Dizzy—thus they began referring to him early in his career—was especially pleased to be identified with the Shephardic Jews whom "he considered to be the best-born, proudest, most romantic and perhaps most flamboyant element of the Jewish people." Such conviction, Dr. Roth writes, "no less than the intellectual qualities that he had inherited from his actual forebears had its part (and it was no slender one) in molding that preposterous character."

Benjamin Disraeli was baptized July 21, 1817. Dr. Roth speculates on an idea: Dizzy's two younger brothers were baptized 10 days earlier. His sister was baptized August 28. "This is the first of a series of mysteries, or at least coincidences, associated with the religious life of the later Prime Minister. Why the baptism should have taken place in instalments, the younger children coming first... is extremely difficult to understand. (Had the delay been due to Ben's illness, he would certainly have mentioned the fact.) But one may hazard the conjecture, put forward indeed with the utmost hesitancy, that the young Benjamin's religious education and Hebraic consciousness were by this time so pronounced that he may have raised objections to what his father flaccidly proposed... (Their elder sister Sarah, always very close to Benjamin, might have shared in the revolt, and stood out a little longer; or it may not have been considered that formalities mattered in the case of a girl.)"

But Dr. Roth admits that this is "pure conjecture, wholly incapable of proof, and most unlikely ever to receive documentary confirmation or contradiction."

Dizzy would have been Bar Mitzvah several months after his conversion. Would his personal history and that of England have changed had he remained a Jew? He certainly would have been deprived of a political career, since no professing Jew could take a seat in the House of Commons until 1858 "and had it not been for his own persistent advocacy the date might have been postponed." He would have made a greater name in literature, the Tory party might have long remained wholly reactionary and British Imperialism would never have developed. But as a Jewish leader he "might have changed the face of the Jewish world." But in this case, too, "speculation is wholly useless."

Dr. Roth's study is replete with facts recapitulating historical incidents relating to Jews in England. There is a record, in his fine biography of Dizzy, of other Jews, who became converts to Christianity and gained seats in the British Commons. Dizzy alone boasted of his Jewish heritage and made it a mark of honor and pride. His leadership in the battle for the removal of the phrase "on the true faith of a Christian" from the oath of admission of Jews to Commons, thus enabling the seating of Baron Lionel de Rothschild, who was consistently elected and who consistently refused to take such an oath, ennobles that era in British politics.

The chapter "Disraeli, Judaism and the Jews" in Dr. Roth's biography is an enchanting resume of the statesman's interests. It is a remarkable tribute to the work of a man who, with a very limited knowledge of Jewish customs and traditions, nevertheless propagated Jewish values and ideals and was the author of a number of novels which embodied his credo as a Jew.

At the outset of his career, he told a young friend, "You and I belong to a race that can do anything but fail." To him Moses was "the greatest of legislators," Solomon "the greatest of administrators," Christ "the greatest of reformers."

In his support of the Jewish Disabilities Bill, "greatly to his credit, and fully aware of the antagonism of his own party, and of what it might cost him, Disraeli did not waver in his attitude or ever shrink from expressing his convictions." Upon the adoption of the measure, "Baron Lionel de Rothschild, after taking the Oath in its amended form at the Table of the House, paused by the Treasury Bench and nervously shook hands with his old friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, (the post then held by Disraeli), who at last had seen another of his dreams come true." Dr. Roth recalls that "the next issue of the Illustrated London News commented pungently on the scene:

"The faint tinge of color that came over the pallid cheeks of Mr. Disraeli as he grasped the hand of the first Judaic member of Parliament, and the momentary gleam of his eye, indicated a sense of the triumph of race; and perhaps at that moment there may have been a deeper feeling still in his heart—one of regret that he was not leading the House of Commons without having been compelled to use those hitherto cabalistic words 'upon the true faith of a Christian.'"

"Searching in Disraeli's political career for traces and effects of his Jewish background," Dr. Roth declares that it is to be found expressed in "that Jewish craving for social justice which is one of the heritages of the Bible, and that Jewish sympathy for the underdog which is one of the results of his history." He enumerates Dizzy's great achievements to show

Elul — Month of Teshuvah

This is the month of Elul—the Month of Preparation for the Days of Awe, for Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur and the festivals that follow.

Elul has been called the choicest month for Teshuvah, for repentance.

S. Y. Agnon, the noted Israeli writer, in his book "Days of Awe," makes this interesting reference

Israel Views Effects Of Hussein's Kingship

How will the assumption of power in Jordan of Prince Hussein, 17-year-old son of the abdicated King Talal, affect Israel and the peace of the Middle East? Israel is watching the situation with anxiety. In England, opinion prevails that Hussein, who had been studying in Harrow since last fall, will be tied by his schooling to Great Britain.

how he improved the working-class conditions, how he carried through the ideas he preached in his novels. The biographer pays tribute to Disraeli: "In this burning compassion for suffering humanity he stands in the full Jewish tradition, in the same way it may be said as Karl Marx did, though approaching the problem from an entirely different angle."

Seeking to improve health conditions, Disraeli parodied Ecclesiastes, "Sanitas sanitatum, omnia satitas" ("Sanity of sanities, all is sanitation"). He improved conditions for agricultural and factory workers. He was much more than a politician and statesman: he was a social reformer.

"Victoria was not by nature inclined to be sympathetic to Jews," but Dizzy won her heart.

There is a legend in Dr. Roth's biography to indicate that Disraeli yearned to see the re-establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine and that he may have been the author of a pamphlet antedating Herzl. But while this may be only a legend the interest he had in a redeemed Zion is apparent in his novels.

Dr. Roth's story of Disraeli's Jewish interests is revealing in all details. It is a fascinating volume that holds the interest even of those of us who have read nearly every book by and about Disraeli. No greater compliment can be paid to an author, and we gladly pay this tribute to Dr. Cecil Roth for his fine new work on Dizzy.

to Elul: "The word Elul has the numerical value of the word BINAH (understanding). Through understanding comes Teshuvah, as it is written (Is. 6:10): 'And understanding with their heart, return, and be healed.' (Siddur Rabbi Yaabetz)."

Agnon quotes the Maharil: "All the month of Elul before eating and sleeping let every man sit and look into his soul, and search his deeds, that he may make confession."

Elul is a traditional month for giving charity, for visiting graves of relatives.

Being First-Born Male Has Its RAMifications

(An American Jewish Press Feature)

David Vanzana, a Jerusalem farmer, thought that a recent ruling by rationing authorities had gone just a bit too far—in fact, it had gotten his goat.

Vanzana went to the office of the Religious Council in Jerusalem to report that his sheep and goats had been ordered slaughtered by the rationing commission because there wasn't enough feed available for them. With him was his goat.

The goat was an unblemished, first-born male, which according to law, had to be redeemed. Vanzana would not slaughter the goat despite the order. After Rabbi Zaslansky, the Religious Council head, dispatched a note to the rationing authorities guaranteeing feed for the goat, Vanzana—and the goat—left happily.

U. S. Expert Aids Haifa Efficiency

NEW YORK—The accomplishment of an American expert in increasing the efficiency of the port of Haifa, in Israel, is reported from Tel Aviv in the New York Times. The expert, Dr. Boris Stern, a specialist in labor productivity in the US Department of Labor, was sent to Israel under the United Nations technical assistance program. Dr. Stern, the report emphasizes, is not the first expert to diagnose the Haifa port's trouble, but he is the first in Haifa or any other part of Israel to persuade labor, management and the Government not only to accept his minimum proposals but also to give him the authority to put them into effect.

. . . all over Rhode Island

There are 3,300 telephone people who live and work in Rhode Island, and they're paid about $11,000,000 a year.

They spend a lot of this money right here in this State — they pay the grocer, buy clothes, pay rent. They buy gasoline and garden tools, heat their homes, get toys for the children. They're good, steady customers of hundreds of local Rhode Island stores and businesses.

The Telephone Company is in business to supply you with the very best telephone service possible. In accomplishing this, thousands of people are employed, millions of dollars are spent here. In this way, the Telephone Company makes a big contribution to Rhode Island's prosperity.

If the Telephone Company is to continue to play its part as a sound Rhode Island enterprise — and provide more and even better telephone service — telephone rates must be high enough to permit it to be financially strong.

SYD COHEN:

35 Years to the Big League

As he waves Brooklyn base runners around toward the plate from his vantage point on the coaching lines, Jake Pitler can hardly be blamed if he dreams a little, and with fingers crossed, of that elusive share of the World Series dough that goes to the two pennant-winning teams.

Pitler, major league baseball's only Jewish coach, has seen approximately $10,000 fly out the window the past two years, although he did collect one full loser's share with the Gang from the Gowanus in 1949. Never having succeeded as a player in big league ball, Pitler probably would get an extra kick out of making the grade with a world championship club this year—and he has that chance, unless the Brooks take another splash.

Jake Pitler has been around a long time—his professional baseball career dates from 1913—and he did not retire from the active ranks until after the 1933 season. Yet, in all those 39 years, only once did Jake get to the top. He spent a year with the Pittsburgh Pirates, in 1917, getting into 169 games at second base and batting a not-too-robust .233, with 89 hits and 39 runs scored, and an extra base output of eight doubles and five triples.

He did get to bat once in three games the following year, but that marked the end of his big league days as a player. From there on, Jake was to play out his string in the minors.

Take another look at the record book, though, and you find something interesting. Jake Pitler left the game after 1918 and did not return for NINE YEARS, until 1928. In 1918 he was voluntarily retired, probably because of World War I, but the rest of the time he was ostracized for playing in an outlaw league.

Upon his return, Pitler could do no better than the New York-Pennsylvania League. H'm, you may be inclined to h'm, what kind of record is that? But here again, there is more to the Pitler story.

Jake's owners must have been impressed with his baseball savvy and field generalship, for he had been back in Organized Baseball only one season before he was named player-manager of the Elmira club. From then through 1945, Jake managed continuously even after his own retirement as a player, with only two years of managerial unemployment.

The record books do not show what happened during the next two seasons, but come 1948 there was Jacob Albert Pitler in the major leagues—on the coaching lines with the Brooklyn Dodgers. And there he has been since. Either Branch Rickey or Leo Durocher or both must have liked Jake's work in the minors to bring him up from class A.

The Dodgers got their trolley wires mixed in '48, but in 1949 they won the pennant, which means that Pitler got a full share, even though he had to settle for the losers' portion. The next year the Brooks finally caught the league-leading Phils on the final day of the season—caught them, that is, where a Brooklyn win would have tied the race and forced a playoff. Dick Sisler's home run in the tenth inning sent the Dodgers home until next year—and next year was the year of the Giants' miracle.

This, then, is the fourth straight year in which Pitler and all the other Dodgers have been close enough to the Series money to get their hands soiled in anticipation of handling the filthy lucre. This should turn out to be the second time in that stretch that they actually have reason to worry about the capacity of the American League winner's park.

So Jake Pitler, 58 years young and a "veteran" of five years with a big league contender and occasional pennant winner, cannot be blamed if he envisions another share of the big dough—and a possible world championship. The Brooks haven't yet taken that big prize.

One final word in Jake Pitler's favor. When a new manager is hired, he normally may be expected to name his own coaches, or even to bring them with him. Well, since 1948 the Dodgers have been managed by Leo Durocher, Burt Shotton and Charley Dressen—and Pitler has stayed right up there with them.

There's only one conclusion to draw—the guy must have plenty on the ball.

Just in case you haven't looked around, the Labor Day weekend starts tonight—and right after that comes the beginning of the fall season with its club meetings etc.

What has this to do with a sports column? Simple. Among the organizations now planning an autumn renaissance is the Men's Association of the Jewish Community Center. The first meeting will be held on Wednesday, Sept. 10.

Without any waste of motion, the Men's Assn. plans to go to work on its project to construct a health club within the Center. Naturally, the Board of Directors must first approve the plan, but men's club officials are confident they can line up the financial and moral support needed to convince the directors.

Julie Michaelson, president, and Saul Geffner, chairman of the executive committee, have worked out a system of rates and privileges that will prevail when and if the health club comes into existence (they claim it will be only a few months after Board approval). The next step is to enroll a sufficient number of members to prove that the idea is a sound one.

If you're interested in learning more about the plan, you're invited to call Michaelson at EL 1-6252 or 6253 during the business day, or UN 1-3056 during the evenings.

The makers of Ballantine Beer and Ale, sponsors of the Yankees broadcasts, must have breathed a sigh of relief when the New Yorkers optioned out a rookie pitcher last week — name of Harry SCHAEFFER.

The automobile is here to stay, but not because of anything Art Houtteman may have had to do with it. The Tiger right hander undoubtedly would prefer getting around in a horse and buggy, or a rocket ship, or something like that.

About three years ago, while in spring training, Art was involved in a crackup in his car and suffered a fractured skull. For a while he was more dead than alive. Early this season his wife was involved in another auto accident in which the couple's seven-month-old daughter was killed. Last week the Houttemans were at it again. Another crackup—this time, fortunately, with no tragic overtones.

Anybody got a nice safe jet airplane handy?

Virgil Trucks' no-hitter against the Yankees was matched double a week earlier in the Pony League, where two pitchers tossed no-hitters against each other. The game was decided in the eighth on a walk, sacrifice, wild pitch and infield roller. Final score—1 to 0.

Latest major leaguer to seek the title of iron man is Harry Byrd of the A's. Seems like every time the Athletics have a double header coming up, Byrd pesters Manager Jimmy Dykes to let him pitch both games. Dykes may have to let him do it some day, if only to get Byrd to quit perching near the manager.
