In Addition to Regular Campaign

UJA Plans 100 Million Drive for Emergency Rescue Work in 1957

NEW YORK—The United Jewish Appeal last weekend set in motion a special nationwide drive for a $100,000,000 Emergency Rescue Fund over and above what it will seek in its regular 1957 campaign to help it cope with urgent Jewish refugee problems created by recent international events.

This unprecedented action was taken by more than 1,500 American Jewish communal leaders in the light of mounting evidence that a minimum of 100,000 endangered Jews will require aid in the next 12 months in moving to Israel and other free countries.

Along with this action, the more than 1,200 communal leaders returned William Rosenwald of New York to a third successive term as the UJA's general chairman, elected U. S. Senator Herbert H. Lehman of New York as honorary chairman of the UJA, named Samuel Rubin of New York as chairman of the $100,000,000 Emergency Rescue drive, and re-elected Rabbi Herbert A. Friedman as the UJA's executive vice-chairman.

At the same time, it was reported that the agencies of the United Jewish Appeal will be required in 1957 to provide life-saving and rehabilitation services for 625,000 men, women and children over-all.

The delegates drew special attention to Egypt's treatment of its 50,000 Jews, asserting that "Nasser daily reveals himself as the spiritual heir of Nazism." They scored Egypt's threat of mass expulsion of Jews, the fact that it is now subjecting Jews to persecution, confiscation of property and the sequestering of Jewish communal institutions "in the manner of the infamous Nuremberg Laws."

Gives $500,000 For College Library

NEW YORK — A gift of $500,000 toward the establishment of the library at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine was announced this week by Dr. Samuel Belkin, president of Yeshiva University. The gift was presented by the D. S. and R. H. Gottesman Foundation in memory of the late D. Samuel Gottesman, noted New York industrialist and philanthropist.

GJC Pledges Support of Special Fund for Israel

General Jewish Committee officers and leaders of the Providence Jewish Community joined with some 1,200 delegates at the national United Jewish Appeal conference in New York last weekend in supporting a special 100-million dollar rescue fund.

Benjamin Brier, 1956 GJC campaign chairman, pointed out that this rescue fund is over and above the regular 1957 campaign total. The rescue fund will be used to meet the urgent refugee problem created by the tense Middle East situation.

Seven individuals each announced contributions of a quarter of a million dollars or more to launch the rescue fund drive.

Meanwhile, GJC leaders have announced that the executive committee will meet soon to consider the best possible timing and means of conducting the 1957 campaign and the special emergency rescue fund drive.

Henry J. Hassenfeld, GJC president, said the first order of business for the GJC is to complete the 1956 campaign — which now stands at $509,000. He noted that there still are many important pledges which have not yet been made and these persons will be contacted immediately. The month of December, he added, will be devoted to an intense drive by GJC leaders and workers to collect unpaid pledges before the end of the year.

Brier presented a check for $100,000 from the Providence com-

Warn of New, Greater Conflicts

Leaders Parley Calls on U.S. For Realistic Mid-East Role

NEW YORK — Leaders of major Jewish organizations expressed concern this week that United Nations failure to endorse direct peace negotiations between Israel and the Arab states will heighten the crisis in the Middle East.

They warned that the absence of unity and joint action among the major Western allies invited further penetration into the area by the Soviet Union.

Four presidents of major organizations addressed the opening session of the Presidents' Conference, a consultation embracing the leaders of 17 national Jewish groups. The speakers were Dr. Nahum Goldmann of the Jewish Agency, Philip M. Klutznick of the American Jewish Congress, and Dr. Maurice Eisendrath of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations. More than 250 delegates from 27 states attended the sessions at the Hotel Delmonico.

Criticizing the UN armistice solution as a "demonstrably untenable" basis for Arab-Israel relations, Dr. Goldmann urged that the United States "invest its enormous prestige" to bring about peace between Israel and the Arab states. A stable peace, he declared, "would enable not only Israel, but Jews the world over, to enter into an inspiring partnership with the great Arab peoples for the purpose of restoring their common civilization

To Float Loan For Sinai Campaign

JERUSALEM — The Israel Cabinet approved Monday a draft measure authorizing the floating of a "security loan" for 40,000,000 pounds to pay for the costs of the week-long Sinai campaign.

The Cabinet also approved a series of measures intended to restore normality to life in the Gaza strip, including: restoration of municipal government in Gaza and other towns in the strip, resumption of coastal fishing by Arab fishermen, opening of banks and other credit facilities and the provision of foodstuffs at subsidized prices for the non-refugee population in the strip. The refugees are under the care of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency.

U. S. Urged to Admit Egypt's Exiled Jews

NEW YORK — Asylum in the U. S. for Jews expelled from Egypt was urged upon President Eisenhower by the Jewish Labor Committee.

A resolution urging that victims of Egypt's anti-Jewish policy be received here on the same emergency basis provided for Hungarian refugees was passed at a rally of 1,000 persons at the Belmont Plaza Hotel.

A wire was sent to the President, who also was urged to instruct the U. S. delegation to the UN to condemn Egypt's expulsion of Jews.

Attending the rally, sponsored by the committee, were representatives of leading labor fraternal and civic organizations.

At the same time, UN figures were released showing that the U. S. had taken fewer Hungarian refugees than any other nation aiding these victims of Soviet repression except tiny Ireland.

Meanwhile, Jewish refugees from Egypt who left Athens aboard the Greek steamer Achilles for Brindisi, Italy, confirmed reports of economic reprisals against Jews by the Egyptian government.

The refugees said properties had been seized, businesses closed and fortunes confiscated.

The obvious intent, they said, was to make the Jews destitute.

In Tel Aviv, Dr. Louis Gaillard, representative of the International Red Cross, proposed that Jews interned in Egypt be exchanged for Egyptian civilians now detained in the Gaza Strip. Israel has offered Egyptian Jews a haven.

The Israeli delegation to the UN said that Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi, in a UN speech, had "virtually admitted" charges that his country had imposed a reign of terror on Jews.

Earlier the Egyptian Embassy in Washington had denied that any Jews had been deported or that their "normal" activities "had been stopped."

Deny Massing Of Israel Troops

JERUSALEM — Israeli spokesmen last week denied Syrian charges that Israeli troops are being concentrated opposite the Syrian border. They characterized these charges as "deliberate fabrications" designed to serve Syria's war of nerves against Israel.

(Charges that Israel, Britain and France are massing troops along the Syrian and Jordanian borders and now preparing for "immediate attack" were made in the General Assembly by the chairman of the Syrian delegation. He demanded that the Assembly give the "danger" of aggression immediate attention. A British spokesman denied immediately that there are any British troops on either the Jordanian or Syrian borders. He asserted flatly that there are no British troops in Israel.)

The Israeli spokesman here also denied the allegation that French pilots flying French planes had aided Israel's Sinai Peninsula campaign. Neither the French Air Force nor any other French or foreign forces participated in the Sinai operation, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

8,500 Immigrants Arrive in Israel

JERUSALEM — A total of 8,500 immigrants arrived in Israel in October, some of them being taken from ship to shore at the height of the Israeli mobilization in advance of the Sinai jump-off.

The number of immigrants to arrive in Israel since the beginning of the year, was 46,262. This compares with 26,866 during the same period last year and 37,000 for all of 1955. Some 4,000 left Israel during the first ten months of the year, about the same rate as last year.

Phoenix Mayor Slurs Israel in Radio Speech

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Representatives of the Jewish community here have broadcast a reply to an earlier radio program by Mayor Jack Williams in which he quoted an unidentified informant to the effect that Israel's operations in the Sinai desert occurred because "a group of Russian and German Jews" described as "militarists," "fanatics" and "hotheads" — are in control in Israel, it was reported in "The Phoenix Jewish News."

The Mayor's report also included the opinion that the United States ought to threaten the Middle East with hydrogen bombing if hostilities did not cease at once, and that the timing of Israel's action was decided upon because, among other things, President Eisenhower would not interfere before an election for fear of losing the Jewish vote on New York's Lower East Side.

The reply by the Jewish community, which the Mayor invited and said he welcomed as an expression of another viewpoint on the Mideast situation, said the attack was the result of grave provocation by Egypt and other Arab states.

Survey Explains Where Rabbis Go

NEW YORK—A total of 4,257 rabbis were in the United States at the beginning of 1955, according to a statement made by Dr. H. S. Linfield, the executive secretary of the Jewish Statistical Bureau, in a new survey, published this week by the Bureau in New York, which is the national organization for the collection of statistics of American Jewry.

Nearly 2,500 rabbis are officiating in Jewish congregations as preachers, teachers and leaders, and 945 rabbis, or 22%, are engaged full-time in specialized Jewish community work, in the fields of Jewish education and Jewish welfare work. This is a new development, Dr. Linfield states, since in former years the number of rabbis engaged full-time in non-congregational service was small.

The survey further shows that there was a large increase in the number of rabbis in the United States during the past quarter of a century. In the Jewish communal survey for 1927, made by the same author and published by the American Jewish Committee in 1930, only a total of 1,751 rabbis were recorded, compared with 4,257 rabbis at the beginning of 1955. The 1927 figure, Dr. Linfield notes, did not include the number of rabbis who were engaged full-time in non-congregational services, which number however was small at that time.

Thirty Percent

At the beginning of 1955, the rabbis of the reform wing, members of The Central Conference of American Rabbis, and the rabbis of the conservative wing, members of The Rabbinical Assembly of America, jointly constituted 30% of all the rabbis in the country, the survey showed.

Of the four Jewish seminaries at the beginning of 1955, two were for the training of orthodox rabbis, and one each for conservative and reform rabbis. In addition to these schools primarily for the training of rabbis, the author lists ten academies for higher Jewish learning with facilities for students to prepare themselves for the rabbinate. These institutions now prepare many of their stu-

What State Department Aide Said of Jewish History

By ROBERT G. SPIVACK
WASHINGTON — Rabbi David A. Panitz, leader of one of the Capital's leading Conservative Jewish congregations, today charged the assistant dean of the State Dept.'s School of International Studies with espousing "false, biased and bigoted" ideas on Jewish history and Israel's role in the Mideast.

The official accused was Dean Edwin Wright, who briefs Foreign Service officers and students on Near East affairs.

Wright was criticized last week by Agudath Israel of America for making an alleged attack on Orthodox Jewry in a speech at the National Presbyterian Church on Nov. 1.

Rabbi Panitz transmitted his views by letter to Asst. Secretary of State Rountree, but would make no comment on the contents of his communication.

Wright said last Thursday that some people had misinterpreted his remarks and were "trying to make me out as anti-Semitic."

"I studied under Jewish professors at Columbia University," he said in denying any bias.

Rabbi Panitz based his criticism on a lecture given by Wright last spring to students in the A-100 Junior Foreign Service Officer course.

This newspaper has come into possession of a lengthy summary of the lecture from other sources.

In a portion of the three-hour lecture, Wright discussed the relationship of Zionism and Nazism. In both, he allegedly said, there was a similar hearkening back to ancient tribal values. Israel, he reportedly said, insists on segregation of Jews from non-Jews.

Hitlerism, the report continued, also favored this sort of segregation.

"Hitler accepted this concept of Judaism," Wright was quoted as saying at one point in his lecture. When speaking of "segregation" in Israel, he was also quoted as saying: "Hitlerism was a revised Judaism of this type."

Rabbi Panitz dealt primarily with this portion of the lecture in his protest to Rountree.

"Dean Wright's presentation shows him to have a distorted view of ancient history in the Near East and a lack of understanding of the Old Testament," Rabbi Panitz said. "Even more flagrant is his lack of knowledge of post-Biblical Jewish history."

"Furthermore, his concepts of recent Jewish history are highly unscholarly, erroneous and malicious."

"May I cite several illustrations? Dr. Wright teaches that Jews have a policy of extermination for non-Jews. He claims that this doctrine is derived from the book of Deuteronomy and has been the continuing program of the Jewish people, in the past and in the present."

"Dr. Wright believes that Jews have always maintained a racist doctrine and that Hitler and Nazism are direct developments of Jewish ideas."

"Indeed, Dr. Wright contends that there are two kinds of Jews today, the 'Hitler type' and 'prophetic Judaism.' According to him, prophetic Judaism is represented in America by the American Council for Judaism, while all other Jews, and especially Zionists, are of the Hitler type."

"Dr. Wright's lecture is replete with intemperate and snide remarks against Jews, thereby casting defamatory aspersions against American Jews. Finally, his statements on Jews who live in Israel are frequently based on ignorance or willful malignment."

Rabbi Panitz concluded that "the presence of Dr. Wright in his present post is a matter of concern and interest to all Americans."

In the lecture which led to the protest, Wright reportedly started off by asking the students for the date of origin of the Arab-Israeli dispute. He then answered his own question by asserting that it began in the 17th Century B.C.

He is reported to have told the students there never has been any such thing as Hebrew civilization and that the term Hebrew is meaningless. He said the attacks on Egypt were begun by the "Habiru," a generalized term for wandering tribes, in their assaults on Canaan. He reportedly identified the term "Habiru" with "Hebrew."

According to Wright's version of what happened, the summary of his lecture continued, the Habiru plundered everything of value and completely exterminated the local population, including women and children. He is said to have referred to the tale of Elijah, and to have given great weight to the conclusion of the story in which, as he put it, Elijah "poured gasoline on the priests of Baal and burned them alive."

At another point in the lecture he said the Jews trace their ancestry from Abraham, who joined with other kings in invading the land and displacing the local population.

This attitude is held by Jews today, Wright allegedly said, that they are justified in going into a territory and driving everybody else out. This, he was quoted as saying, is a key factor in the present Palestine problem.

On the blackboard in the classroom, Wright wrote three phrases and underlined them:

Expel non-Jews in state.

Sabbath Day.

Food—dietary.

Regarding Sabbath restrictions, Wright allegedly said that non-religious Jews who drive in Israel on the Sabbath face physical extinction from Jewish fanatics.

He said it was simple nonsense to explain the Jewish food and dietary laws as health precautions. These laws, he allegedly continued, are simply segregation laws.

Bringing the story into modern times, Wright was reported as saying that Israel began violating the arms agreements soon after the Palestine armistice.

"Israel got a tremendous amount of arms from the Communists pouring in . . . no one has ever pointed this out in the American press."

He said that Israel found "excuses" in 1948 and 1949 to attack the Arabs. During that period, he allegedly continued, she was supported in her "aggressions" by the Soviet Union.

When former Israeli Foreign Minister Sharett came to see Secretary Dulles last November, Wright is said to have told his students, he promised there would be no further retaliations against Arab attacks. The next day Israel attacked Syria and killed 56 Syrians.

"Nobody considered it retaliation."

Treasures to Increase Knowledge of the Past

WASHINGTON — About 1500 years ago a magnificent city of fabulous wealth was erected and named Caesarea after Caesar Augustus. Archaeological treasures from this once-glorious city have now been found in Israeli waters. The America-Israel Society in Washington has made known.

The discovery was made by husband and wife Edwin and Marion Link, noted American underwater explorers. Their expedition was sponsored by the America Israel Society.

The Links set out for Israel in September equipped with only a clue and a theory, apart from their skill and enthusiasm. The clue was presented by Israeli fishermen who in their pursuit of a good catch were netting fish and hundreds of ancient jars as well. The theory was advanced by Israeli archaeologists who thought the jars were simply necessary utensils for ancient ships which probably were wrecked and now buried in the sea not far from the areas where the jars were found.

At Caesarea, the Links found a sunken harbor, huge marble blocks, a well-preserved Roman stone coffin, jugs, and evidences of many other artifacts. At Acre, they came upon an inscribed tablet on the harbor floor. And at the Sea of Galilee, they discovered two wooden boats. At all these points, the Links believe that drifted sand has preserved much more than they found on their initial and limited expedition.

The Links plan to return to Israel in the Fall of 1957 for the full-scale expedition.

But what about this "stuff" the Links found? What is its significance? Is this really a bonanza? Who or what is inside that stone coffin? Is there any loot aboard those wooden boats?

But quite apart from specula-tory meanderings, definite things can already be said about the find. The rescued objects can be identified, dated, and thereby increase our interest and knowledge of the past. For example:

The sunken harbor of Caesarea which the Links uncovered was originally built by Herod the Great who governed Judea for Rome. The huge marble blocks at Caesarea have been identified as the foundation for a tremendous colossus erected by Herod. It was Herod, according to the ancient historian Flavius Josephus, who turned a decayed seaside city indents for ordination and the vocation of the orthodox rabbi. More rabbis than ever before are now being trained at the American Jewish schools, Dr. Linfield states.

Nearly 80% of the American-trained rabbis have secular education of four years of college or more, the survey reveals.

The present survey of the rabbis of the United States was undertaken, Dr. Linfield states, following the tercentenary of the settlement of Jews in the United States, 1654-1954, which was celebrated by the Jewish community during 1954-1955; and the survey was designed to give the status of the rabbinate as American Judaism begins its fourth century in the country. The survey deals with the number of rabbis in the country — orthodox, conservative, reform; rabbinical training; secular education; and areas of service.

Delegate Body

The Jewish Statistical Bureau, financed by voluntary contributions, is under the auspices of the National Council for Statistics of Jews, which is made up of delegates from the Union of American Hebrew Congregations (the federation of reform temples); the Central Conference of American Rabbis (association of reform rabbis); the United Synagogue of America (federation of conservative congregations); the Rabbinical Assembly of America (association of conservative rabbis); the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America (federation of orthodox synagogues); and the Rabbinical Alliance of America, the Rabbinical Council of America, and the Union of Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada (three associations of orthodox rabbis).

Telephone Company Requests Increases

"Eager to meet all the needs of Rhode Island people for telephone service, we must have rates that meet the costs of providing service with an adequate return on the money needed to provide the facilities to do the job," said Walter L. Dignam, Rhode Island general manager of the Telephone Company, last week as a new schedule of telephone rates was filed with the Public Utilities Administrator.

The new telephone rates include increases of 25 cents to $1 a month on residence main service, 60 cents to $1.55 a month on business main service, and varying monthly amounts on items of auxiliary service and equipment. Increased charges for service installations and other work on customers' premises are also proposed.

Mr. Dignam said the Telephone Company also requests a minimum charge of 10 cents for calls made from public pay telephones, adding that Rhode Island is the only state where this minimum charge does not now apply.

tion, even in Israel," he allegedly asserted.

As further proof of Israel's segregation policies, Wright cited Jewish marriage laws. He said the Israel Minister of Religion turned down proposals to relax the restrictions. He said it is considered a tragedy in Israel when an Eddy Fisher marries a Debbie Reynolds.

He asked the students if they thought Fisher was undergoing a tragedy. "Do you feel sorry for him?" he was quoted as asking. "Certainly I don't . . ."

Treasures Found

to a place worthy of dedication to Rome.

Somewhere between 38 A.D. and 110 A.D., Josephus writes: " . . . he (Herod) set about planning a magnificent city (Caesarea) there, and erected many edifices with great care all over it of white stone. He also adorned it with the most sumptuous palaces . . . and what was the greatest and most laborious work of all, he adorned it with a haven (the now sunken harbor) sheltered from the waves of the sea . . ."

At another point he continues: "Herod . . . laid out such a compass toward the land as might be sufficient for a haven, wherein great fleets might lie in safety; and this he effected by putting down huge stones of above 50 feet in length and not less than 18 in breadth (the huge stones the Links found were 60 feet by 18 feet) . . ."

Josephus continues to speak about the beautiful towers erected on these stones. He talks of underwater vaults and cellars and a seaside amphitheatre. This suggests there is more to look for and perhaps more to find. Also, at the Sea of Galilee, the Links found the wooden boats in such an excellent state of preservation to suggest that other well-preserved relics could be found — possibly some dating back to the time St. Peter his his fishing there. Surely there is much and seemingly many more surprises to be brought up from the Israeli waters which — like the Dead Sea Scrolls — will be talked about for a long time.

Warn of Conflicts

that has gone to waste through exile and conquest, and of reclaiming the Middle East from stupor and apathy."

Cites UN Obligations

Dr. Goldmann said it was the duty of the United Nations, if it wishes to avoid a global conflict, to provide the incentive for a definitive Arab-Israeli peace. "To achieve this aim, the big powers and the United Nations must impress on the Arab countries that their relationship with the world community must be based on reciprocity, that they cannot hope to enlist the United Nations when it suits their purpose and to ignore it when it does not," he declared.

If the present crisis "produces nothing better than an uneasy armistice," Dr. Goldmann added, "there will be no security for Israel, for the Arabs or for the world community. A return to the status quo ante would encourage extreme Arab nationalism and produce new conflicts which may be far more difficult to check than the present crisis."

Dr. Goldmann expressed the opinion that "the key to normal relations between Israel and the Arab countries, and to the future stability of the Middle East, seems to have been placed by destiny in the hands of the American Government and President Eisenhower." He emphasized that the leaders of the United States Government now face what is perhaps the greatest challenge that has ever confronted an American Administration.

The Homeless Ones

The refugee, uprooted from his home, fleeing with remnants of his possessions, dodging the border guards and the barbed wire, has almost become the central symbol of our hate-stricken age.

Refugees by the thousands still stream across the frontier from Hungary into Austria. Other thousands, the Jews of Egypt, suddenly denationalized by Nasser's regime after generations of residence and stripped of their jobs and property, have joined the caravan of the world's homeless ones, seeking a place to rest, a haven for the future.

America, founded by the refugees from oppression of an earlier age, once stood as a beacon of hope for all mankind. It can be again if it opens wide the doors to greater numbers of Hungarians and to those among the 10,000 to 15,000 "stateless" Egyptian Jews who may wish to settle here. They are equally the victims of tyranny; they are equally deserving of our compassion.

During the past few days, there have been two developments in Washington on the refugee problems, one encouraging and the other disturbing.

The good news is the appointment of capable Tracy Voorhees as coordinator of the Hungarian refugee program, although his success will depend on how firmly the President supports him. The fate of Edward Corsi, the last man who tried to straighten out the refugee program, demonstrates the perils Voorhees faces.

Countering the announcement of Voorhees' appointment, however, the White House also disclosed it has received "a considerable number of letters strongly opposing the admission of any more refugees." It is curious this information should be released at this time. The White House receives "a considerable number of letters" on every issue, but it normally does not make a point of underscoring that fact. Is a case being built up to minimize a possible breakdown in the refugee program by exaggerating the obstacles?

The refugee program must be widened and must succeed, for the meaning of the symbolism of the world's homeless ones is that mankind shares a common fate. No man and no nation is an island unto itself.

The 'Gifted' Child Problem

By BENNETT SCHIFF

The square of an academic circle is a bright child.

Bright kids are not uncommon, and educators estimate that they form 1 per cent of the juvenile population. Some estimates put the figure at 2 per cent.

Locating a bright child is not difficult. The problem is what to do with him once you locate him, or, as more often happens, once he locates you.

Educators call them "gifted" children, which mean they have an I.Q. of at least 130.

Any way you describe him he's the "square" of the educational system. How to handle him for his own good and the benefit of society is a problem that has been afflicting teachers since the time of Plato.

It is a problem that becomes particularly difficult in a democracy.

Governments with total bosses out to do total jobs simply test all the kids, reap up the bright ones and fill them full of whatever it is they feel the country requires in terms of specialized skills and knowledge.

And so a man like Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Strauss warns that Russia is turning out twice as many engineers as the U. S.

It's simple in Russia because of the system there and the fact that the problem is attacked nationally.

Here the problem becomes vastly complicated. It is so complicated that in order to be specific you have to generalize. This is because the experts don't agree and because different cities approach the problem in different ways. Many communities do nothing at all about it and others have different programs.

For one thing, the experts don't even agree on what constitutes a "gifted" child. There have been numerous studies of the subject, some monumental, but for the investigators the term "gifted" has different connotations.

Some authorities choose a score of 140 on the Stanford-Binet intelligence measuring test, the one known as the I.Q., as a minimum requirement. Some decide upon 130 and some reach all the way down to 120.

The authorities now agree that intelligence tests alone are inadequate as a basis of selection.

To get the composite of a gifted child some take into account children with unusually high mental capacity, extraordinary aptitudes for schoolwork and special talents for making superior contributions to society.

Others emphasize children who excel in creative thinking and abstract reasoning, who have a wide scope of interests and produce work of superior quality.

Still others say the category should include not only those children with mental superiority but the physical, social, moral and educational status of the individual in addition to the relative development of special gifts.

The intelligence test fails to measure all of the mental qualities of a child. What it concentrates on is his ability to learn. It is incomplete because many children lacking in the ability to make a large body of information function creatively score high on the tests.

So the experts say that "there

ONE MAN'S OPINION

Comfort in the Plight of Many

By BERYL SEGAL

What I am writing now will appear in print a week later. By that time things will have changed from what they are at this moment. Let us hope for the better. We hate to think that anything worse is possible. As it is the world is wrapped in a veil of gloom, and fear grips the heart of mankind.

At my right hand is the radio and the time is the 10:30 World Tonight news roundup, over CBS. And at the end of such a program sleep escapes you and thoughts darker than the autumn night rob your mind of rest.

Reports from Hungary: Refugees streaming toward the Austrian border in the bitter cold. Many make the few yards to a new life. Some are cut down within a hand's-length of the border. Still more are deported into the unknown. "An internal affair", arrogantly declares the Soviet delegation at the United Nations, and the United Nations accepts the declaration and appeases its conscience with a resolution.

Report from Syria: Russian arms arrive by the ship-loads. The quantities and the type of arms are more than the Syrian army can ever use or will ever master. It is obviously stacked away for an army that will travel light and will come to pick up the arms when and where it will want to use them. A repetition of the arms build-up in Sinai found in the desert during the invasion, a buildup far in excess of the need or the ability to use by the Egyptians. Clearly another Sinai is prepared in Syria. Every observer sees it, but not the United Nations. On that tribunal of the World's conscience the Syrian delegate stands up to deny the whole thing, and arrogantly accuses Britain of inventing the story for purposes of propaganda. And the United Nations accepts the declaration, and goes on demanding "Forthwith" withdrawal of Israel and Allied troops from Egyptian soil.

A report from the United Nations: "In all the days of my life I have not heard or read so is no known scheme of selection which is complete or infallible."

But what is known and agreed upon by the very great majority of teachers is that the typical school curriculum does not offer sufficient challenge to mentally superior children.

What is required in additional research into the problem, the educators agree, are more complete follow-ups into the adult life of the superior kids to determine their status and their contributions to society and objective evaluations of their personalities.

Also needed are studies exploring the relatively low correlations between ability and achievement and of the environmental and emotional factors which cause the unbalance.

The problem, generally speaking, is still wide open.

many lies, distortions of the truth, hypocrisy and falsehoods as during these past two weeks (since the invasion of Egypt by Israel, Britain and France), from the platform of the United Nations, where the conscience of the world is, supposedly, heard." So says a reporter assigned to the United Nations by his newspaper.

A report from Egypt: A spokesman for Nasser serves notice to the world that Egypt will settle for nothing less than Nasser's own terms. That Egypt expects reparations for her injured innocence. That the world can expect the gravest catastrophe if Nasser does not get his way. And what Egypt does to her Jews or other nationals is nobody's business. And the tribunal of the nations of the world once again trembles before the threats of the dictator whose army was defeated in three days fighting and could have been destroyed in three more days were it not for the helping hand stretched out by the United Nations.

A report from England: Bitterness and frustration over the attitude of the United Nations and the United States and their refusal to understand the dangers brewing in Egypt. Accusations that the State Department is saturated with oil interests, and that America is happy to see England in the state she is in so that American oil companies can take over in the Middle East. Accusations unfounded, to be sure, but how else can England explain the attitude of the United States toward Nasser?

A report from France: The country is on the verge of economic collapse. The government is about to fall, and who will take over is anybody's guess. The press takes comfort in ridiculing American policies and the stubborn blindness of a senile Dulles. Desperation and bewilderment.

A cartoon in a leading newspaper: Nasser dangling from a ledge, holding on precariously by the fingertips of his hands. One more push and he is down, and the world is rid of a menace. But in the nick of time two hands come to his rescue, holding him up and helping him back to the top. The hands belong to two great world powers. One hand wears a red star on the sleeve of the shirt, and the other, alas, belongs to Uncle Sam. And a refined looking gentleman, very correct in his bearing, very cultured, supervises the rescue. Who else but the United Nations?

A report from Jordan: This insignificant pauper state arrogantly cuts all relations with Britain and is giving her "Allegiance" to the highest bidder. Who pays more?

A report from Washington: The State Department views with concern the arms build-up in Syria, the doings in Jordan, but insists that before anything can be done in the Middle East the "invaders" must leave Egypt. A blind spot in Washington.

plays second fiddle to Egypt in the Middle East. Nasser is now as arrogant as ever because he knows the weakness in American foreign policies, and he gloats over the helplessness of the opponents, Britain, France and Israel. He has them by the throat and he tightens the squeeze while the United Nations' secretary-general agrees to all his demands. The conscience of the world growls before the mighty dictator.

And Israel? No report from Israel tonight. All is quiet there, comparatively quiet, in the midst of a seething cauldron. Nothing spectacular happening there, and the newsmen departed to better pickings in other parts.

And as the reporters unburden themselves one by one of their stories from East and West, from home and abroad, the words of our sages come to mind:

"The plight of many is half a comfort."

Troubles are unbearable when you are singled out from among the rest of the world. Such was the plight of Israel before the fateful night when the army marched into Gaza and Sinai. At that time Israel was alone the target of the arrows of Nasser. Now Israel is not alone in her plight. It is shared by many. Many know now what Nasser planned and what he is capable of doing. And that is easier to bear than before.

Little comfort, but the burden is only half as heavy when it is shared by many.

How to Be A Champ

Way back in 1951, Paul Richards was looking around for a pitcher who might help his White Sox. Learning that Johnny Sain was available, Richards went directly to Billy Southworth, manager of the Braves, who then were in Boston. Sain was not winning in those days. There was something wrong with his arm. What, Paul wanted to know, did Billy think of Johnny's future as a pitcher.

Southworth answered frankly that Sain's arm was dead, that the lanky righthander was through. Richards thereupon directed his search elsewhere.

The Yankees also needed pitching help, and they learned that Sain was on the block. But the New Yorkers do things differently. They got permission to send Johnny to a doctor of their choosing. The medical report gave Sain a clean bill of health. His arm was all right. Further investigation revealed that Johnny himself thought his troubles had come from overwork in the days when the Braves had a pitching corps composed largely of "Spahn, Sain and a day of rain". John said the arm was now coming around.

So the Yanks closed the deal, after National League waivers had been obtained.

Before he let the pitcher go, however, Lou Perini, owner of the Boston club, contacted Joe Cronin. He told the Red Sox general manager in effect that he had a chance to peddle Sain to an American League club, but if the Red Sox were interested, they could have first crack at him.

Cronin said no, the Red Sox were not interested.

Thus Johnny Sain went to the Yankees in August of 1951, helped them win the pennant that year, plus two others in the succeeding two years, and kept them in the race with a tremendous effort over the first half of the 1954 season, when Cleveland won the pennant.

The sad point is that the Red Sox could have had Sain, and thereby might have blocked the Yankees from a pennant or two, and might even have done some flag winning of their own.

Even sadder is the fact that Boston's thinking still has not changed. There was Sain; and it was pointed out here last week that no attempt was made to get a fellow like Vic Raschi when he was available in 1954. And more currently, there is Al Rosen.

The infield problem of the Red Sox is extremely acute, particularly at second and third base. Rosen is a competent third sacker, who also does a workmanlike job at first base. He is a clutch hitter of proven ability, a slugger who could reach the left field wall at Fenway Park more often than anyone else on the club. Both on defense and offense, he could help the Sox immensely.

Yet, when Hank Greenberg first began hinting a year ago that Rosen might be on the block, Boston did not even show enough interest to ask "how much?"

This is gospel truth, on the word of Greenberg himself. This column several months ago quoted Greenberg when he listed the names of the clubs that had inquired about Rosen. Boston was not on that list.

It is obvious at this time that Flip very likely has played his last game for the Indians. He is certainly up for sale or trade. The Red Sox still have a serious infield deficiency. But as yet there is no apparent thought up at Jersey Street about putting two and two together. For some unapparent reason, the Boston brass seems to be afraid the answer might be four.

Instead, the Sox in 1956 took a shortstop (Klaus) who had been the spark plug for the entire team the year before, who had hit well and fielded well, and who had lifted the team into pennant contention—they took this man, announced he was not a good shortstop, and stuck him on the bench in favor of a raw recruit who was handed the important job on a silver platter.

When still another rookie regular (Malzone) had flopped decisively at third base, this shortstop was installed at the hot corner, where he was unsteady, and the team went along with the rookie shortstop, who was awful. And on the other side of the diamond was a second baseman who plays that position least well of all the others on the field except pitch and catch. Is it any wonder that aging Mickey Vernon was the Sox best infield performer of the year?

You know, there might be some compensations in all this if the rookie shortstop who hurt the Sox so much while he was getting his experience could now take over in 1957 and do a big league job. But Don Buddin has been drafted into the Armed Forces, and presumably will be gone for two years. So now Boston is right back where it was two years ago.

Worse off, in fact; for both shortstops, Billy Klaus and Milt Bolling, know that their manager has no respect for their abilities. How can they be expected to play good ball, relaxed ball, confident ball under these conditions next year?

This series of articles is not intended to be derogatory to the Red Sox, but rather to suggest a new concept of thinking that would put an end to mistakes such as those mentioned from the past, and build up the Bosox into an honest-to-goodness pennant contender and champion. What's done is done. The 1956 season is gone and buried. The 1957 campaign is what matters now.

Yet, despite these lofty and earnest words, I cannot help but wonder how even a Texan can be as stubborn as Manager Mike Higgins showed himself to be last year. Surely he must have known that Buddin was subject to military service. Why, then, did he relentlessly ruin his team because of his determination to build up the kid?

The episodes listed here have been intended as emphasis of my theme of last week that the Red Sox have an obligation to themselves, their paying public, radio and TV fans, and all the rest, to go all-out for the pennant every year. Players who know that their management considers any campaign a year of experimentation cannot possibly become ingrained with the spirit of victory, the determination to triumph over adversity, the inculcation of what is commonly referred to as the Yankee spirit.

You cannot permit ineffective rookies to bog down your pennant effort. And you cannot ignore veterans who seem to be over the hill. Baseball history shows all too clearly what Johnny Mize and Johnny Sain did for the Yanks, what Sal Maglie did for the Dodgers. Boston, whose youth movement flopped, evidenced no interest in Mize, passed up an open invitation to get Sain, did not pick up Maglie when he was offered on waivers from Cleveland last year. It should make a Red Sox fan sick to think what these men might have done for his club.

While the need for a change in Boston policy is screaming to be heard, such a potentially valuable player as Al Rosen is slipping away as did all the others. Al Lopez and his White Sox are interested in Flip. The Red Sox, unhappily, do not, as they grimly stumble along their narrow, stubborn way.

Russia's Role In the Mideast

—By Max Lerner—

"We will bury you," Khrushchev thundered at the Western diplomats in his drunken (or perhaps not-so-drunken) vodka outburst at the Polish Embassy. What did he refer to? Certainly not the Hungarian revolt, about which his heart was bleak. No, the flutter of joy in his bleak heart came from the diplomatic victory that Russia and its ally, Nasser, have won after Nasser's whopping military defeat.

President Eisenhower, who seems to be shaping foreign policy decisions in the Dulles interregnum, may know what he is doing—but the net effect of the recent decisions has been to salvage the political life of the Egyptian desert Hitler and to present Russia with a grateful Communist stooge in the Middle East.

Since their re-entry as a great power into the Middle East 18 months ago, the Russians have played rings around our diplomats and policy-planners. The Israeli victory threatened to keel their stooge over, but with some fast footwork at the UN, and with our help, he and the Russians recovered. From the Russian standpoint the last two or three weeks in the Middle East have been the best weeks of their lives.

If my more studious readers want a book of solid facts on the background of Russia's present role, contained within the frame of a brilliant analysis, I recommend Walter Laqueur's recent volume, "Communism and Nationalism in the Middle East" (Praeger). They will find that the Russians have been trying to infiltrate both the Arab and Jewish communities since 1919, that they have had very poor luck with Israel, that they have done a good deal better with the Arabs, especially in Syria and Lebanon, and that they have had a special appeal for young Arab lawyers and intellectuals.

But none of the movements of Arab communism, so clearly traced in this book, could have led Russia to its present victories. The Russians are not where they are in Egypt and Syria today by peddling Marxist principles or Leninist theory. They got there by arms diplomacy. Their tactic in Egypt has been to work with the army junta: Which means with Nasser and Gamal Salem and their brother officers, to woo them and seduce them by big arms shipments, to embroil them ever closer in the Russian net—and in the end to take them over.

They have gone at least two-thirds of the way. Yet today Eisenhower and Dulles seem as entranced in their rosy view of Russian intentions as ever Neville Chamberlain was in his dream that he could handle Hitler with kindness.

The big Communist arms deal with Nasser was begun in talks that Shepilov—then Pravda editor, now Foreign Minister of Russia—had with Nasser at Cairo in July, 1955. The Egyptians have mortgaged their total cotton and rice crops for years to the Kremlin countries in return for the arms. But if the recent Israeli figures are anywhere near accurate, Egypt will be paying long after Nasser is gathered to his fathers.

For even if the Russians have already shipped arms worth between a quarter billion and a half billion, it is a good investment. In Syria they have pursued a different policy, and by the strength of the various Communist-front groups they may be moving toward an Arab type of "people's democracy."

Both Egypt and Syria—and perhaps Jordan—are being prepared as military-political bases for future Soviet action.

The chances are strong that Russia will not have to fight a war in the Middle East, big or small, in order to win its goals. If only the Americans are sufficiently bewitched and bemused by their new role of Boy Scout master in the UN, the Russians can win by default.

Once they have Egypt, Syria and Jordan, their next target is bound to be the Sudan on one side of Egypt and Saudi Arabia on the other. They can threaten, cajole and subvert those governments. Then their final targets will be Iraq and Iran. They will operate without the open military moves that might invite UN action, and the U. S.—having scuttled its Grand Alliance with Britain and France—will be powerless to intervene.

Somewhere along the road Israel would be "liquidated"—to use the favorite Communist word. But that would be only a minor matter with Russia, however important to the Arabs.

Even today the Russians are getting a down payment in return for their role as protectors of Nasser. They have established a working bloc in the UN with the Arabs and Asian diplomats like Krishna Menon of India. On Hungary the Arabs have bought the idea that Russian soldiers can never be imperialists, can never snuff out a movement for nationalist freedom, can never transport thousands of young people to slavery.

Nasser has said that to buy Communist arms doesn't mean the same as buying Communist ideas. It is hard to take this seriously, since Nasser is anything but a fool. He has, as I have shown, already bought some important Communist ideas. There will be others.

You may be an honest girl, or think you are. But once you are being kept by a fast-talking wolf, in a manner to which you rapidly become accustomed, you get over your scruples about accepting some of his "ideas."

Our problem is not to come up with more hundreds of millions with which to bribe the Arabs. It is not money that will save us, but policy. We must aim at an Egypt run by a leadership that believes in ultimate democracy, one committed to socialist welfare programs for its people, following the pattern of the best new republics of Asia.

To achieve this we must be ready to confront the Soviet pattern of aggression-without-war in the Middle East, call it by its name, counter it with everything at our disposal. Especially with brains—what we still have of it.

Criticizes Double Standard In Western Reliance on UN

By ROBERT E. SEGAL

Granted that people of insight now understand that in trying to prevent a Munich in the Middle East, three realistic governments—France, Britain and Israel—may have contributed to a latter-day Korea, we need to assess further the new psychological and moral plane on which opinion-makers are fighting for men's minds.

"In some very complacent nationalistic circles," Reinhold Niebuhr observed just a few days ago, "there is an impression that France, Britain and Israel have made grievous mistakes and that we (the U.S.) alone remain virtuous upon the 'path of honor.'"

And he properly asks whether our new "national pacifism," i.e., our insistence that force is ruled out in every and all situations, may not be responsible "for the desperation with which our democratic allies sought to counter the threats of the new alliance of Egyptian dictatorship and Russian tyranny."

We have come suddenly upon a new double standard in international relations. The UN is one thing for the United States, certain members of the British Commonwealth and several other nations wanting desperately to preserve the peace; it is quite another thing for Cairo and Moscow, who abuse it and flaunt it at will and then unctuously raise its proud banners when other nations—no longer able to bear Egypt's provocations—take that kind of action naturally reserved to them as independent sovereignties over and above the terms of their UN contracts.

Subject To Immobilization

The cry of the easy phrase makers is no longer "Let George do it!" It is now "Let the UN do it!" And it is precisely at that point of such complete reliance upon the General Assembly (now subject to immobilization by the powerful Asian-African-Soviet bloc) that many Americans are becoming most restive.

Even Roscoe Drummond of the New York Herald Tribune—who would appear to be as sympathetic with President Eisenhower's philosophy and methods as any correspondent in the land—has given open expression to the anxiety of those who want to be patient but cannot wait forever to see Egypt and its adventures brought to the conference table to forge a peace barring a return to the deadlocked previous status.

Following the President's first post-election press conference, Drummond reported that many correspondents felt let down. "Mr. Eisenhower," he wrote, "tended almost continuously to deal with the most pressing new problems on the basis of old formulas and repeated generalities. . . . He could have declined questions about the Middle East because of their delicacy. But he didn't. He spoke at length on them without adding information or insight."

And reflecting much of the same feeling of let-down, the

New York Times observed that "if ever there was a time for an 'agonizing reappraisal' of American foreign policy, this is it."

Scales Unbalanced

Eisenhower said at his press conference: "Remember this one thing: we are trying to be friends with both sides (Arabs and Israel)."

Few will quarrel with this. Secretary of State Dulles in 1953 put it a little more bluntly; he said the time had come for the United States to redress an imbalance, indicating that this country had been too friendly with its fellow-democracy, Israel.

Well, our government has put weight on the other end of the scales. And so has the USSR. And the inevitable has happened. Its Military Intelligence having indicated that the Arabs were preparing to make good their threat to push Israel into the sea, Israel took the appropriate move to preserve itself.

In so doing, Israel was simply putting into action the wisdom of the observation that the free world cannot avert war forever by adopting a policy of peace at any price. Its people knew—if some others did not know—what a price the Munich Pact had extracted in life, in property and in sovereignties.

Perhaps at the end of this nightmare, true peace will dawn. Perhaps when more people solemnly think through this tangled chain of events, they, too, will come to realize that the free world cannot afford additional Munichs.

Perhaps, indeed, it will be possible eventually to let the UN do it. But until dictators like Nasser can be brought to accept the spirit of UN, to adopt a single standard of political morality, the free world will have to go on depending upon courageous countries like Israel to keep at bay the forces of darkness.

Answers to History's ???

GREAT AGES AND IDEAS OF THE JEWISH PEOPLE. Edited by Leo W. Schwarz. Random House. 515 pp. $5.

By PHILIP S. BERNSTEIN

In February of last year I visited David Ben-Gurion at the Kibbutz of Sedeh Boker where he was tending sheep in the strange interlude between his premierships. From our conversation two things stand out in my memory.

The first was the complaint that my brother-in-law, Ralph Marcus, was too slow in producing his next volume on Philo of Alexandria [Hellenistic Jewish philosopher, known as the "Jewish Plato."]. B.G. has become a Greek scholar, and is avidly studying Hellenistic culture.

The second was his conviction that Israel would have to, and would, save itself. We were concerned with western alliances, with U.N. safeguards, with economic and military aid.

Without disparaging any of these, he insisted that the Israelis had their fate in their own hands, and possessed the intelligence, the courage, the faith to endure.

* * *

In his way Ben-Gurion was giving his answer to the mystery of Jewish history. Why has this strange little people survived? Why has it remained creative, protestant, the people to whom "despair was the supreme irrationality?"

Frederick the Great evoked another answer from his chaplain when he scoffingly demanded, "Show me a miracle." The clergyman replied, "The Jews." This is the religious explanation, that God "chose" them for immortality and to bring light to the gentiles.

Other answers, more rational perhaps, but from which the core of faith is not lacking, are offered in "Great Ages and Ideas of the Jewish People." Leo W. Schwarz, in this volume commissioned by Hadassah, has assembled and edited contributions from six of the most eminent Jewish scholars describing and assessing the Jewish heritage. Each covers the period of his own specialization.

Most interesting to this reviewer (who obviously cannot in 700 words do justice to this evaluation of a 4,000-year civilization) were the sections written by Professors Kaufmann, Marcus, Roth and Baron.

Yehezkel Kaufmann of Jerusalem's Hebrew University has long been known to scholars, but only by reputation to the layman. Here for the first time in English is his revolutionary interpretation of the Bible. He demonstrates how the universalistic, moral, monotheistic religion of Judaism became the national faith of the Jewish people, and thus enabled them to resist absorption when they were dispersed.

Ralph Marcus of Chicago University, foremost authority on Hellenistic Judaism, distills encyclopedic knowledge in 45 pages. Here is a vivid picture of one of the most creative periods in Jewish history when the Greco-Roman world offered unprecedented blandishments, dangers and challenges.

Oxonian Cecil Roth adopts an unusual device. He depicts European Jewish history through a day in the life of an ordinary Jewish family. It is not only a charming picture of a Jewish household but suggestive of the survival factors in Jewish history.

The final essay of the book, and perhaps correctly the longest, is by the renowned Professor Salo Baron of Columbia University. It deals with "the modern age" in which modern Jews can be expected to be most interested.

These 170 pages really constitute a book by itself. This is the best short history on the Jews in the modern world now available. Out of his vast erudition, Professor Baron has highlighted the major factors in modern Jewish history, emancipation, nationalism, culture changes, socio-

For a word does not remain in its speaker's possession; he to whom it is addressed, he who hears it, or acquires it by chance—they all get a share of it; the word's fate, while in their possession, is more fateful than what its original speaker experienced when first uttering it.

the rediscovery of EMMA LAZARUS

. . . the impassioned poet and courageous spokesman for the Jewish people whose sonnet is inscribed on the Statue of Liberty. The story of Emma Lazarus is as meaningful and vital today as her life was to her contemporaries. Friend to the noted thinkers and creators of her time, Emma Lazarus offered her great gift as a poet to light a torch of liberty. No American woman has felt more deeply for the oppressed peoples of the world nor used her talent more forcefully in their cause. She glorified in her heritage as an American, a woman and a Jew. Now her inspiring life has been recreated in a radiant biography by Eve Merriam, herself a poet of note. Get your copy of EMMA LAZARUS: Woman with a torch today for 10-day, trial examination. Malice, and this is an important principle, is more widespread among the old than the young . . . Most old folk are nastily malicious, cruel as cruel can be, save that they lack their teeth and claws. Otherwise, if they still had their strength, then when their time arrived to depart from the world, some of them would get up from their beds and go and smash everything to bits, and then go back and fall on their beds and breathe their last . . .

An account of the mainstream of Judaism, its distinctive traits, and its message of unity, freedom and compassion. In a clear perspective of Judaism as a religious humanism, it places practical emphasis—for a fuller and happier life—on correct reasoning, an ethical message and moral action. Its faith and humanitarianism are contrasted with those of other religions in the course of history.

King Herod Not Guilty

From "HEROD: KING OF THE JEWS," by Jacob S. Minkin (Thomas Yoseloff, $3.75)

Herod's unsavory reputation has scandalized the church no less even than the synagogue; in fact, the former even more bitterly than the latter; for, by some strange juggling of dates, history has connected the birth of Jesus with the last days of the Judean king, although in all probability they were four years apart.

Although Jesus was not yet born when Herod died at Jericho—the story was nevertheless believed by millions and found its way into the New Testament, the liturgical plays of the Middle Ages, the Canterbury Tales of Chaucer, making the name of the "baby killer" one of the blackest villains in history. As though the list of his numerous crimes were not yet long enough without enlarging it by any apocryphal stories, his

Before the Christian holidays, when large numbers of gentiles passed through Goray on the way to a shrine, young boys were everywhere industriously selling the pilgrims barrelsful of sweetened water. The Goray fairs were famous throughout the countryside . . . And what merchandise did Jews not sell!

True, often enough Rabbi Benish had interdicted Jews' dealing in Christian images. Nevertheless, secretly sales continued of missals with gilded covers and pages, wax candles and even holy pictures of saints with halos round their heads. In some out-of-the-way corner of the fair stood the few Goray gentiles, selling beet-brown salamis and white hog fat. Once a fastidious young man passed by them and conspicuously held his nose, as though something smelled; afterward, he remarked peevishly, "The goy certainly eats well . . . you can smell it for a mile!"

From "A Piece of Blue Heaven," by Abraham Margolian (New Elizabeth Pub. Co., $4.50).

In the street, in front of a now empty Jewish home, stood a huge moving-van. On its low snake-shape were the words: ABRAHAM PULS. This was an Amsterdam firm, taken over by the Nazis, the familiar name used as a respectable front to mask their looting. Furniture was being roughly pushed inside the truck, later to be stowed in Rhine barges, and pure Aryans in bombed districts in Germany would receive this Jewish furniture as "love gifts" of their fellow Aryans in the Netherlands. Obviously, the rightful Jewish owners were being robbed. Was this the worst that was to befall them, or only the beginning?

BIBLE STORIES FOR LITTLE CHILDREN. By Betty R. Hollender. Union of American Hebrew Congregations. 71 pp. $2.

THE FIRST CHANUKAH: STORY AND RECORD BOOK.

By Charles E. Bloch. Bloch. $2.95 This first Jewish juvenile combining story, picture and recorded music, describes the first night economic transformations, America, anti-Semitism, Israel. He sees the emergence today of three distinct types of Jews—the nationals of the State of Israel; the non-religious national minorities in the Soviet Union and her satellites; and the religious non-national minorities in the west. In his eloquent peroration Professor Baron, like an ancient prophet, maintains "the Jewish people still has a tremendous mission to perform . . . to help in charting mankind's path toward its ultimate, let us hope, messianic goals."

The answer which these scholars give to history's question seems to be a combination of continuity and flexibility, of faith and reason, of millennialism and anti-Semitism, of universalism and nationalism. And through it all runs the golden thread of an eternal covenant between an eternal people and its Eternal God.

DIGNITY & REVERENCE

The Jews believe in the dignity of man. This concept has filled our lives both at home and in the synagogue. Before birth and after death, we are impressed by the idea of man being more than mere physical body . . . he has spirituality—an individual mantle of dignity belongs to him.

Even after death a Jew is not deprived of his dignity. His memory is held in reverent respect. He is honored in many ways, including the imperishable memorial of having Kaddish recited by his family and by Jews in assembly everywhere.

Is this reverence reflected in the surroundings of his final resting place? Is his dignity cherished by careful attention to the appearance of these surroundings?

A burial estate in a modern garden cemetery like Sharon Memorial Park is a constant source of comfort to the living. At Sharon, New England's first all-Jewish garden cemetery, no weeds, no broken-down tombstones, no crowding mar the serenity of rolling countryside. Here dignity is preserved everlastingly by PERPETUAL CARE, assured through special endowment funds set up in trust. At Sharon you can be sure your family estate will be cared for forever without any assessment on generations to come.

SHARON MEMORIAL PARK IS ONLY A BRIEF FORTY MINUTES DRIVE FROM PROVIDENCE ON ROUTE ONE. Why not plan to visit Sharon Memorial Park and see how truly beautiful . . . how genuinely inspiring . . . how really different . . . a Memorial Park is from an old-type cemetery.

Dick Stern's Glorified Bull Session

Closeup

By BENNETT SCHIFF

In his 43d year, S. Richard Stern, Ivy League alumnus, Fifth Av. resident, registered Republican, father and correct American citizen, took up a soapbox and an American flag and went out into the streets.

A few days later, on election eve, he took 1,280 of his dollars, bought an hour of time on the Du Mont TV station and presented himself to the audience.

"This," he announced, "is a paid political broadcast. I paid for it."

It was after midnight and he couldn't expect much of an audience at that time but Stern was for Adlai Stevenson for President and he wanted to let as many people as possible know why they should be, too.

More important to Stern was that he wanted to "stimulate people to think."

He still wants to and so do the people at Du Mont. They've been thinking about giving him an hour show each Sunday entitled: "Dick Stern, Private Citizen."

"It will be," said Stern, "about anything a private citizen would be interested in. A few telephones would be available for people who wanted to call me and make a point, offer some data, or perhaps correct me on facts. It will be completely unrehearsed."

Several sponsors have already contacted Stern, and he expects the show to get off the ground within a few weeks.

With the exception of his insistence upon thinking for himself, Stern is a conventional man in every aspect of his life. He likes to think, which may not be so comparatively remarkable, but then he likes to say what he thinks openly, which is more remarkable indeed.

It is a method of behavior which requires not only curiosity and independence but courage and involvement, too.

In this particular case, it also required $1,280, which he says he really couldn't afford but which he felt he had to.

DICK STERN, PRIVATE CITIZEN, IS A WELL made man of medium proportions. His black hair is thinning and is iron gray at the temples and his eyebrows are bushy and prominent enough to invite attention. His voice, in the middle range, is vibrant and forceful.

Stern went into the public relations field after graduating from Dartmouth where, he says, he didn't let classes interfere with his college education.

Today he operates a drug manufacturing firm with offices at 5 E. 47th St. It's his own business and he likes it better that way.

He lives with his wife, Jimmey, and their daughter, Liz, who is 8, in a small, upper Fifth Av. apartment, and they spend their week-ends at their country home in Connecticut.

Stern started out to help the Stevenson campaign by going over to the offices of Volunteers for Stevenson and asking what he could do to help.

"I stuffed envelopes and typed lists and held a Stevenson party in my home," he said the other day, "but after a short time I felt that they weren't making the most of my energy, at least I wanted to do more."

"One evening after work I went to the people up there and asked what else I could do and they suggested soapboxing. I went over to the Operation Soapbox section and received my instructions, which consisted of taking a soapbox and a flag and going out into the street."

"My first assignment was with another volunteer speaker, a lady named Sylvia Cooper, who was wonderful. Neither of us had ever been on a soapbox before and the only other public speech I had ever made was to a trade association."

"It was a rainy night and we got into a cab with the flag sticking into one corner, the soapbox in another and a huge poster of Adlai and Estes jammed in with us."

"We spotted a big, lighted billboard at our assigned corner, 10th St. and Av. B, and we set up shop. I got up on the box not knowing what to say and just started to talk. Of course, there weren't many people there and after my knees stopped shaking I just kept talking to thin air, which is what you have to do on a soapbox or no one will stop."

After a while a few people stopped. That night Stern and Miss Cooper spoke on three corners, meeting their greatest success near a Democratic club which had just emptied out as they approached.

IN ALL STERN SPENT TWO NIGHTS AND A week-end on soapboxes and by the time the week-end had arrived moved uptown to Fifth Av., where he had the experience of being chased by department store doormen and of "collecting mink coats for Stevenson."

"When I woke Monday morning I decided to buy time on TV and sell Stevenson. I reasoned that a good salesman is easier to sell than a guy who isn't a salesman. What happened was that I had managed to sell myself while I was on the soapbox."

"I thought that it would cost two or three hundred bucks and when my advertising agency came back with the $1,280 figure I swallowed very hard. I knew that I was buying practically no audience and that it was an unsound business proposition."

But he went ahead with it anyway. The response was tremendous. The switchboard was jammed with calls, with Stern handling two telephones during the second half of his hour.

ONE MAN LEFT HIS HOME, TOOK A CAB TO THE studio and came in with a $250 check in his hand and the request that Stern stay on the air after the hour was up.

"It's a wonderful thing," Stern said, "for a guy unknown to anybody to walk up and buy time without a script and without fear of censorship."

Worth more than anything else to him, however, were the letters that began to come to him.

Some excerpts:

Q "... Your inspiring action dramatically brought into focus how lax I have become in my responsibility as a private citizen ..."

Q "... First of all we want to tell you that you have been a real inspiration to us. It is easy, very easy indeed, to be bright nowadays, but it is difficult, most difficult, to have faith ..."

Q "... Thanks for what you are doing for the preservation of human decency. Your work is one of the profoundly encouraging signs of present time in our society ..."

Q And: "... Dug your Stevenson pitch and it was the end. Wish I could afford more than this deuce. Unfortunately I am not a successful business man."

What Stern had obviously done was to get into the consciences of a lot of citizens. In the struggle between conscience and complacency today it is conscience which falls back and there is an absence of Tom Paines which keeps it there.

Some of Stern's constructively irritative effect was due to such statements as these:

Q "I think Mr. Dulles, if you'll excuse the expression, has fallen on his Aswan Dam."

Q "Strontium 90 was found in the milk your kids are drinking one year ago."

Q "In view of his statements, any Negro who votes for Eisenhower has got a hole in his head."

Q And: "I'm against Nixon for President because he hasn't got the record, he hasn't got the qualifications, he hasn't got anything. His record in Congress is really terrible."

Stern is the kind of man who after reading that Benjamin Franklin had a group of friends with whom he met for discussion periodically, sat down and thought about it.

"I said this is a damn good idea. In this day of TV and radio and passive participation, we're losing our ability to converse."

So he called a dozen of his friends and they began to meet in his apartment. That was three years ago and they're still meeting every couple of weeks or so.

"It's nothing more than a glorified bull session," Stern said, "but it's grand and I've learned plenty."

S. (for Samuel) Richard Stern is a man who is actively against passive participation.

Know Thyself

Will You Marry The Right Person?

— By Wells Carr —

(Score 3 for each question answered Yes.)

1. Do you credit yourself with being realistic and practical in judging members of the opposite sex? ( )
2. Have you been glad on several occasions that you waited until infatuation cooled, that you didn't act impulsively? ( )
3. Physical attractiveness is important, but do you require a great deal more of anyone you might consider as your mate? ( )
4. Are you wary of moody, jealous, temperamental persons of the other sex? ( )
5. Or those who are over-dependent, unstable or weak in character? ( )
6. Are you careful about becoming involved with anyone who may have a hereditary mental or physical ailment which might become serious or affect any children you may have? ( )

7. Would you hesitate to marry anyone with whom you were always clashing and quarreling? ( )
8. Or a person who revealed a selfish, self-centered nature? ( )
9. Do you firmly believe that a fairly long engagement is advisable? ( )
10. Would you reject anyone you felt was insincere, might not be loyal? ( )

Twenty-four to 30 assures you that you are wise and wary in appraising members of the opposite sex and probably will choose the right person as your marital partner. From 9 to 21 gives you only a 50-50 chance of making a wise choice—questions which were not answered affirmatively should be carefully studied. Less than 9 warns you that you are impulsive and unperceiving and can very easily marry the wrong person.

Diaries Tell Story Of Jewish Pioneers

CINCINNATI, O. — Historians have provided Hollywood and TV producers with a new and authentic version of the great stagecoach robbery from the days when the West was young.

Blazing six-shooters halted a coach in the danger-infested Gila Valley and badmen stripped the terrorized passengers of cash and valuables. But one victim, bolder than the rest, with the tact of a polished diplomat, flattered the robbers so graciously for their kindness in avoiding bloodshed, that the bandits returned his watch, and then returned watches to two other passengers. Before they made off with the loot, the persuasive victim talked the badmen out of money for food and drink for himself and his now peniless fellow-passengers.

The story of the quick-thinking robbery victim, Isador Elkan Solomon, is one of the many dramatic and thrilling authentic anecdotes of the wild West told in the current issue of the periodical, American Jewish Archives.

The entire issue of the magazine is devoted exclusively to the part which Jews played in the settlement of the trans-Mississippi West. The story of the role played by peddlers and pioneers, rabbis, cowboys, agriculturists and shopkeepers, in the opening of new frontiers and the development of new areas, is drawn directly from the diaries and private papers of the men who lived the adventures and is told in their own words.

Solomon, whose quick wit outsmarted stage-coach bandits, was lured by the opportunities of the West and in 1876 settled with a family of five in Pueblo Viejo, Arizona, in the Gila Valley. His trading post became the area's first post office, and he became its first postmaster. The town changed its name to Solomonsville and became the seat of Graham County.

R. I. JWV Leads National Average

The Rhode Island Department of JWV announces that membership in the several posts comprising the Department is now 118.8% higher than at a corresponding date one year ago. "The Jewish Veteran", the national JWV newspaper, in its Nov. publication reports that a nationwide survey places Rhode Island in second position in paid-up membership increases. The R. I. Department is running almost four times ahead of the national average.

Abraham Goldstein, Department membership chairman, urges all veterans who have not joined or paid their 1957 dues to do so before the New Year, so that they may be eligible for national and state prizes.

Mr. Goldstein added that, "There is a strong possibility that the R. I. Department may lead the whole country if enrollment in JWV keeps up the present pace."

If they cast sentiment aside, and make the winning of the pennant the matter of prime importance, there is no limit to what pinnacle of success they may ascend next year or the year after that.

More positive determination, less sentimental standpat-ism, a genuine change in the concept of thinking at Red Sox headquarters, should provide all the ingredients in the do-it-yourself kit required to show the Boston brass "How to Be A Champ."

Recipes From An Israeli Menu

Petah Roll

8 cups sifted all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons salt
1 package dried yeast
2½ cups warm water
Mix and sift flour and salt into large mixing bowl. Sprinkle yeast into warm water. Stir until dissolved. Add to dry ingredients. Mix into a dough. Turn into a lightly greased large bowl and cover with waxed paper. Store in a warm place about 2 hours or until double in bulk. Knead, on floured board, until light and elastic. Divide dough into 8 pieces. Roll each piece into a circle ½ inch thick. Place in greased baking pan. Bake in a hot oven (400 degrees) 20 to 30 minutes or until lightly browned. Split open and fill with falafel, tachina paste and pepper relish.

Falafel

1½ pounds chick peas
6 cloves garlic
2 teaspoons salt
½ cup dried, whole hot red peppers
1 cup water
1 quart vegetable oil
Cover chick peas with water and soak overnight. Drain. Put chick peas and garlic through meat grinder, using fine blade. Add salt. Soak red peppers in water 5 minutes. Add the water and the seeds from the pepper pods to the chick pea mixture. Mix and shape into one-inch balls. Heat 1 quart oil in 3-quart kettle to 370 degrees, or until a 1-inch bread cube browns in 45 seconds. Fry falafel, a few at a time, 5 to 7 minutes or until a deep golden brown. Drain on absorbent paper.

Tachina Paste

Mix ½ cup sesame butter, ½ cup water and 3 tablespoons lemon juice together.

Pepper Relish

Chop 5 green bell peppers, ¼ cup dried, whole, hot red peppers and ½ cup parsley together. Add 1 teaspoon salt and 2 tablespoons covered container and let stand lemon juice; mix well. Place in one or two days before using.

Aiding the Aggressors

There is little indication from the recent developments in the United Nations that the Middle East crisis is being dealt with in terms of fundamental solutions. What appears to be the exclusive concern of the preponderant majority in the UN Assembly, led by the strange combination of the Soviet Union and the United States, is to restore the status quo that existed before the invasion of Sinai by Israel and the occupation of Suez by the Anglo-French forces. Repeated Assembly resolutions are addressed solely to the business of expelling the troops of Israel, Britain, and France from Egyptian territory, and by the same token to rescuing Nasser from the military disaster which he had suffered.

As matters stand now, the actions in the UN will have the effect of reviving and consolidating the Nasser dictatorship, permitting Nasser to emerge with enhanced prestige and influence. For the prospects are that not only will his territory be cleared of the invaders, but that the UN police force will operate on his terms and that he will resume full control of the Suez Canal after the UN has obligingly and at great expense cleared the canal of the wreckage with which he has illegally blocked it. It is not surprising that the Egyptian Foreign Minister has been able to boast publicly, "What we do with the canal is our own business."

All this will no doubt help to strengthen the belief, loudly proclaimed by the Soviet Union in concert with the Arab states, that Nasser has been the innocent victim of unprovoked aggression and that the "aggressors" must be brought to book. It is necessary therefore to stress again and again that it was Nasser who committed the original aggression of which the British, French, and Israeli actions were the inevitable consequence. It was Nasser who precipitated the Suez crisis by seizing the canal in violation of an international treaty. In persistent defiance of the UN he closed the canal to Israeli shipping. He made a mockery of the armistice with Israel by sending guerrilla bands into Israel territory to plunder and to kill. He accumulated a vast stock of arms, liberally supplied from Soviet arsenals, in preparation for a massive assault upon Israel whose annihilation he constantly threatened. In noting the large amount of Soviet equipment which the Egyptians abandoned to the Israeli forces in the Sinai Peninsula, Prime Minister Eden declared in a speech on November 17,

Who can doubt that aggressive plans had been carefully laid? They had indeed been proclaimed. In all this dangerous activity, of which the seizure of the canal formed only a part, no one should have doubted that an explosion was inevitable sooner or later.

Not to take account of the conditions which led to the explosion and then to work for the restoration of these very conditions, as the UN appears to be doing, is to pave the road to disaster. It is baffling in the extreme that the United States should have teamed up with the principal enemy of the free world to punish and humiliate its democratic allies and friends and at the same time to spread a protective halo over a hostile and aggressive dictatorship. At a time when Russia stood condemned for its brutal assault upon the people of Hungary, the U. S. helped to divert the world's concentration on the Soviet's monstrous aggression and direct it toward those who were forced to act in self-defense. Russia has blandly ignored the UN resolution calling for the withdrawal of its forces from Hungary. But the United States did not initiate or join in any further UN demand that the Soviet forces get out of Hungary "immediately" or "forthwith," as it did in the case of the troops of its allies in Egypt whose purpose in coming there was not to enslave the people of Egypt or to deprive Egypt of its sovereignty, but only to punish a lawbreaker and a disturber of the peace.

Unlike Russia, the democratic countries of Britain, France, and Israel will not defy the mandate of the UN; they will withdraw their forces from Egypt. But the crisis in the Middle East will not be resolved thereby. Surely it is not the intention of the United Nations to make it possible for Nasser and his Soviet backers to resume their aggression under its auspices. If a repetition of the recent explosion is to be avoided, the UN must exercise its moral authority to compel Nasser to renounce his lawlessness and negotiate with Israel for a durable peace as well as consent to a settlement for the Suez Canal that will guarantee its free and unhampered use by all nations without exception.

ONE MAN'S OPINION

The Passing of A Generation

By BERYL SEGAL

Little by little the central figure of the great American Jewish novel emerges. More and more of the first generation immigrants complete their cycle and write the final sentence in their book of life. The book is closed. Now the writer who is to write that great novel can examine his model as the mason examines the blueprint for the edifice he is to erect.

And the central figure in that novel of the future will not necessarily be of the world of Marjorie Morningstar, neither as pathetic as Marjorie's father, nor as comical as her uncles, not as pompous as the judge, nor as hollow as the young people in that famous novel that was so popular a year or so ago.

The central figure in the American Jewish novel that I visualize may well be modeled after the 81-year-old gentleman of Brooklyn Heights and Palm Beach, Florida, who passed away last Saturday, Dec. 1.

He came to the shores of America around the turn of the century, from a town in Eastern Europe. As most immigrants of the 1890's, he came here after a long and tortuous ocean voyage, in a crowded vessel, and stepped ashore literally penniless. At the age of 17 he had no profession, no trade, and very little formal education. But he knew that he wanted to remain here, that the home he left on the other side of the ocean held no hope nor promise for him. His hopes and his future were here.

So he began the usual routine, so common among the immigrants of that day. Work by day, and study by night. In the first eight years of his sojourn in the New World he was a three-dollar-a-week office boy, worked as a shoe salesman and as a shipping clerk. At the age of 25 he knew enough of the language of the land and the ways of the land to undertake a job with a real estate firm in Brooklyn.

That part of New York was as yet to become the great borough that it is today. People with vision could foresee the things to come, and our young immigrant from Poland was one of them. After two years he became the head of a Brooklyn Heights Improvement Company whose specialty was the building of small apartment houses and residential hotels designed for the thousands of new immigrants who swelled the population of New York every day.

Things went well for him. Some people call it luck, some call it talent, but this young man had an uncanny knack for picking the right tract of land. No sooner did he complete the deal than the trend of population shifted toward that particular part of Brooklyn. He could now afford to marry and to establish his own home. He worked hard and neglected his health. He recuperated quickly from a sickness that kept him in a health resort for a year, and he returned to his real estate and building ventures with even greater vigor than before.

He acquired a good name in the world of builders and real estate developers. He attracted the eye of the giant in the field, the Title Guarantee and Trust Company. He was called in to "doctor" one of the subsidiary real estate firms, the Thompson-Starret Company. The young man whose parents never owned a home undertook to reorganize the old and respectable firm. He became general manager, then vice president, and ended up as president of Thompson-Starret. Under his regime the company built the Gimbel Brothers Department Store, and in the course of this venture he came to grip with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company who owned the land underneath the ground, and he prevailed. He built the Woolworth Building that was to be for many, many years the tallest building in the world and the sightseeing wonder of New York. Next came the Palmer House Hotel in Chicago and the Sears Roebuck Building in that same city, and great buildings and landmarks in many an American city.

Came World War I and the former immigrant was called to the service of his new homeland in the capacity he was best suited. He entered the staff of Ordnance, and was in charge of tank production, the armor that won that war.

In the meantime, other offices and interests and honor came to this immigrant. Directorships in oil and copper and railroad insurance companies. He gave generously to Jewish and non-Jewish charities. Endowed colleges. Moved among the great.

Other great triumphs in construction came to him. He designed the municipal buildings of the City of New York, and built the Equitable Insurance offices. He changed the sky line of New York City. He had a hand in the building of the Grand Coolie Dam on the Columbia River.

Illness and old age and the tide of times retired the man who in 40 years transformed himself and the world around him. He retired to his memories; the early struggles and the restlessness; the driving ambitions and their fulfillment; the multitudes who shaped his life and whose life he affected in turn. And the many unfinished plans.

But the world is a busy place. New drives, new ambitions, new ventures, and new faces. The faces and the names of a former generation are quickly forgotten.

Then one day a brief notice on the wires and a small story in the newspapers, and not in all of them at that, tells of an end that must come to all:

"Louis J. Horowitz, noted builder and philanthropist, died in Palm Beach, Florida. He left nine million dollars to New York University for the Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation. This is the largest legacy left to that university in the 125 years of its existence."

Left by one who has never been inside the halls of learning of a college, and who at the age of 17 came out of the steerage of a ship with a few pennies jingling in his pockets.

Of course the writer of the American Jewish novel will have to people and to animate the world of Louis J. Horowitz, and there will be the usual number of the good and the bad, the pleasant and the repulsive, the kind and the cruel. The path that leads from a humble hut in Poland to the skyscrapers of New York is not a smooth one. But in its main outline the story of the Louis J. Horowitz' is more true to the mood of the American Jew than many that purports to portray it and even become a best seller.

Louis J. Horowitz reminds us of the passing of a generation that began at the bottom and rose by their wits and in the process learned the ways of this land and excelled in it often better than descendants of the Mayflower.

How to Be A Champ

Two items in last week's baseball news provide an appropriate springboard for the climax of this series on how to make over the Red Sox into a strong contender and champion.

First off was the news that the Detroit Tigers had gotten Jim Finigan in trade to play third or second base. The Red Sox need a second and a third baseman desperately — but the Tigers got a good one, without giving up anybody of value to them. Once again, the poor Bos-

Second was the rumor that Ed-die Yost and Roy Sievers may come to Fenway on a regular, rather than a visiting, basis. Translated into fact, this would be good news for Bosox fans. That would leave a second baseman as the big requirement.

That brings us down to the basic elements of this series — to wit, how can the Red Sox obtain the truly top flight second and third basemen who will tighten up that infield, improve the pitching, and add needed morale and class to the team. With the minor league meetings on, the Sox could make the hoped-for deals long before this column comes into print (exactly one week from the writing). In such an event, I might look foolish, bleating about needed trades after they have been made. That is the chance I have to take.

Besides, there is no evidence as yet to show that there has been the sort of shakeup in the thinking department at 24 Jersey Street along the lines suggested here these last several weeks.

My proposition is that the Red Sox have far better trading material at hand than even they apparently realize; and that what they have to offer should certainly bring in return no less than one of the best second and one of the best third basemen now operating in the American League.

I insist that the Hose could have offered more for Finigan than did the Tigers, and without hurting themselves at all, and I now set out to prove that Joe Cronin could get the men he needed if he started thinking like a champion for a change and forgot about the rumors that he has an excellent chance to become the next commissioner of Baseball.

Up to now, the names most bandied about as trading material have been Sammy White, Norm Zauchin, Ted Lepcio, Billy Con-solo, Milt Bolling, Faye Throneberry and Gene Stephens. With the possible exception of a deal involving Al Rosen, who has worn out his stay at Cleveland and who therefore might come rather cheap, and Yost and Sievers, whose salaries are too big a nut for Washington to handle, you'll agree, I think that this group does not contain any one or any combination of players outstanding enough to warrant some club giving up the kind of crackerjack players that the Sox need so badly.

Obviously—to me, anyway—Boston must place more important chattels on the market. So here are my ideas—and please bear in mind that the men I name would not hurt Boston by their absence.

1. Billy Goodman. A fine ball player, will be only 31 next season. Really good hitter, still capable of being one of best all-around men in major leagues. Would be tremendous asset to club needing .300 average hitter and man who can plug holes caused by injury, slump or trade. Many teams would trade high for him.

Boston would not miss him because Sox are wasting him as second baseman, where he shines least. Constant criticism of his work at second has hurt him, got him down, impaired his effectiveness. Leg injury slowed him also. Now is ideal time to trade him off, while value is still high.

2. Pete Daley. Every club seems to have good catcher, many brag about having next best to Yogi Berra. But not many have good young catcher who can hit. Sox need veteran catcher like White who is excellent handler of pitchers, "knows" the league, and hits better than last year. (Lifetime average around .270). Heywood Sullivan, coming up, is considered unusually fine prospect, better than Daley according to what I hear. Well, why keep two such fine rookies around where one, and maybe both, will be ruined by inactivity? One of them is ideal trade bait. That's why I pick Daley.

3. Throneberry-Stephens. Good —really good—left hand hitting outfielders are rare, therefore valuable. Faye and Gene are fleet helped Red Sox at all. A .500 pitcher bogs down the pennant effort, certainly does not aid in drive to top. If they trade him, Bosox lose only his great potential, which may or may not (take your pick) ever be realized. Fact that he beats Yanks is offset by his inability to pitch even .500 ball against rest of league. Those three to five wins against New Yorkers should not constitute solid reason for keeping him around, unless he is used exclusively against them.

Trading value: Many a manager would drool at chance to acquire Will, most would say they can bring out his potential where Boston failed. Chance to beat Yanks a couple of extra times would blind them to Nixon's overall record.

The point is—Nixon would be fought for by other clubs, and Red Sox could egg them on and jump the bidding.

Summary

These four players — Daley, Goodman, Throneberry or Stephens, and Nixon—make a package that should be irresistible to other American League clubs, while their loss should not affect the Red Sox at all. They can be offered either as individuals, or in package deals with lesser players such as those mentioned earlier in this column, or in a combination of packages by themselves; that is, Goodman and Nixon, Daley and Stephens, etc.

Don't tell me that in return for such value the Red Sox couldn't obtain that outstanding second baseman and third baseman that are so sorely needed, plus other lesser players who would add to the bench and the pitching staff!

With good catching and first
