Anti-Semitism Still Present In Germany

NEW YORK — A "few Nazi-minded bullies" harass Jews in Germany today, while the majority of Germans look on with indifference, Look Magazine reported last week.

Despite a flurry of anti-Semitic incidents including desecration of Jewish synagogues and cemeteries, "a new wave of anti-Semitism is not sweeping Germany," the magazine commented.

The Look article presents a detailed report on the anti-Semitism encountered by one Jewish family in a small town near Frankfurt and draws the following conclusions:

1 — The presence of many Nazi holdovers in local and state governments, in the courts and in schools, helps sustain the indifference of Germans to anti-Semitism.

2 — Schools, churches and other institutions are not telling German youth about the Hitler period.

3 — The anti-Semitic flurry has lit a fire under the federal government and instructions have gone out to crack down hard on offenders.

4 — There is increasing grumbling about being "taxed for the Jews" as the result of German compensation to Jewish individuals and Israel.

5 — Jews in big cities have little trouble but refrain from social contact with Germans. Until the recent trouble, several hundred Jews had been returning to Germany every month for the past two years.

6 — A real threat of anti-Semitism can develop only if there is a serious economic crisis or an extreme nationalistic movement because of external developments.

Smash Secret Nazi Gang Of High School Students

WAYNE, N. J.—A secret student society calling itself "The Nazi Regime of America" was smashed and twelve of its members suspended following an investigation by school superintendent Dr. John H. Martin when school authorities discovered iron crosses, swastikas, Nazi arm bands and literature in desks and lockers.

The twelve, all students at two local high schools, are said to come from middle income families, were released in custody of their parents pending action by the Passaic County Juvenile Court.

The youths, according to Dr. Martin, held meetings in Nazi uniforms, bought Nazi war souvenirs from a mail order firm, collected guns and built a six-inch pipe-bomb.

They also affected the German "von" before their own last names. They were uncovered when they launched a campaign to enroll members among the 1,300 students in Wayne High School.

According to the principal of Wayne High, John Van Dyken, the investigation, in which the FBI was said to have participated, began when the life of a school teacher was threatened by a member of the gang.

Botanist Experiments With Farming As Practiced In Primitive Times

SUBEITA, Israel — Fruit trees were planted this winter in the parched Negev highlands by a Professor of Botany who quit the vice presidency of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem to farm in the wilderness.

If Prof. Michael Evenari's trees bloom, they will open prospects for transforming 1,000 square miles of desert.

Extraordinary Feature

An extraordinary feature of the experiment is that the scientist has shunned modern technology and is using primitive but resourceful methods of land husbandry practiced when the highlands were last cultivated in the Nabatean and Byzantine eras.

He reasons that the ancients apparently prospered despite the scant rainfall that has deterred modern agriculturists. None of their trees remained. But there is ample evidence of a thriving agriculture in the ruins of terraces, spillways, conduits and cisterns near the ancient cities along the Nabatean caravan routes between Southern Arabia and the Mediterranean coast.

Restore Ancient Farm

One of these ancient farms at Subeita has been restored by the Israeli Government as a tourist site. Workers from the immigrants' Negev town, Tel Yeruham, reconstructed the rough stone fences surrounding the four-acre field, rebuilt the fallen conduits and spillways that had irrigated the fields. They also rebuilt the terrace walls that had kept the water in the field until it penetrated the crusty soil.

Professor Evenari planted his experimental saplings in this farm. It is situated in a depression so that it gets not only the three to five inches of rain that normally falls in the region each winter but also rain water streaming down from the surrounding hills. He installed clockwork gauges at the intakes to measure the flow and used boards as floodgates in the spillways in place of the stone slabs used by the Nabateans. Otherwise, the farm is the same as in ancient times.

Trees Planted After Rain

After the first heavy rain flooded the farm this winter, the trees were planted. The saplings grew during the winter but Professor Evenari says it must take years before the experiment can be correctly evaluated.

There will be no more rain until the late autumn. When the rains come, Professor Evenari and his wife, Liesel, expect to be living in a stone house overlooking the field. An ancient farmhouse with an ample cistern is being restored for their use.

Theory Will Be Tested

Specifically, they will examine Professor Evenari's theory. He believes that the resourceful farmers of ancient times had discovered that the soil on the slopes, when moistened became crusty and practically impermeable. They therefore raked together the stones and bared the soil of the hillsides so that it should become an impermeable pavement. Hence, the run-off was increased.

Networks of natural ditches and artificial channels directed the streams to the farms in the depressions or gulleys where terrace walls contained the waters until they were absorbed. In this way, Professor Evenari says, the farms received water from catchment areas twenty and thirty times the size of the fields.

Lo! Pity The Poor Baby Contest Judges

Three weary judges completed their task of picking the winners in the James Kaplan Inc. Baby Photo Contest last week, and promptly prepared to book passage to such peaceful climes as wildest Africa and the Himalayas, rather than face the wrath of parents and assorted relatives whose favorite babies did not gain selection.

Quite seriously, the judges pointed out that the four categories of this contest did not include "prettiest" or "most beautiful" baby. There had to be an attractive pose, an unusual expression, a personality that happened to catch the eye, an appealing cuteness. Beauty alone was not enough to warrant selection of the winners — and that explains why many babies were not chosen.

Also, several photographs submitted were of a sort that did not seem to do justice to the subject. Reluctantly, the judges passed them by. In any event, only eight babies could be named as winners.

The winners and their categories appear on another page. Notification will be sent when their prizes are ready.

Judges included Mildred Chase, Norman Salhanick, and Erika Hasterlik.

Morrison & Schiff Awards

THIS WEEK WE ARE HAPPY TO PRESENT

An Orchid To...

Mrs. David Field

Recently installed as president of the Miriam Hospital Women's Association for the second year, Mildred Field has climaxed a long period of service to that organization. She first became active in the affairs of the Hospital Women's Association some 14 years ago, and has served since in such capacities as publicity chairman, chairman of the annual Equipment Event, and vice-president, among others.

She has also worked with PTA, various public health movements, and other organizations. In general, besides her personal interests, she is always willing to help whenever she is called on.

Max I. Millman

Twenty-five years of service in any field of endeavor represent quite an achievement. But somehow there seems to be an added significance when such a long period is devoted to Jewish education. Max Millman will be honored tonight at Temple Beth El in celebration of his quarter century of service as a teacher in the Beth El Religious School.

That he has taught for so long a time in the Religious School is a tribute to his devotion to the cause of Jewish education. A specialist in Jewish history and the scriptures, he is known as a most popular teacher at Beth El, where he has gained the deep respect and affection of the student body.

Nominations for awards may be made to Morrison & Schiff Editor, Jewish Herald, 1117 Douglas Avenue, Providence

Orders Seizure Of American Records

NUREMBERG — The Nuremberg public prosecutor ordered the seizure recently of American-made phonograph albums which reproduce the history of the nazi movement.

A Bundestag deputy urged that the West German Government act to halt sales of the disks throughout West Germany. The envelopes containing the records carry photographic reproductions of nazi leaders, including Hitler.

The Nuremberg prosecutor based his action on a Bavarian law which bans the "use and publication of symbols of outlawed organizations," asserting that the term "symbol" applied to nazi songs and speeches.

Social Democrat party leaders have charged that the records are a thinly-veiled effort to glorify the nazi regime. They contain, in addition to nazi songs, speeches by Hitler, Goering and Coebbels, and excerpts of the Nuremberg trial proceedings.

ZEALOTS IN ZION

By THEODORE N. LEWIS

Meah Shearim, the abode of the Neturai Karta sect, is, by all accounts, the most fascinating quarter in Jerusalem. Only a few feet from the Mandelbaum Gate which opens into Jordan, it is one of the chief tourist attractions in the land.

Meah Shearim is unique not only by virtue of its narrow lanes, winding alleys, synagogues without number, and countless yeshivas, but by virtue of its inhabitants. The men are deeply religious. Many belong to various Hassidic sects, affect long peyoth, beards, gabardines, and invariably wear the fur hat known as shtreimel even in the hottest season. Material needs are few and simple. The chief occupation is prayer and study. Here ancient ghetto Jewish life flourishes in all its piety, fanaticism, and poverty.

To say that Meah Shearim is a world apart from the rest of Jerusalem and Israel is understatement. Meah Shearim is not only a separate and distinct enclave, it is in perpetual and feverish rebellion against the state. The vast majority of its inhabitants simply refuse to recognize the existence, and thus the authority, of the State of Israel. The very creation of the state represents for them an act of defiance of the will of God; a pious Jew, they say, must await the coming of the Messiah and not take matters into his own hands by proclaiming a Jewish state before it pleases the Almighty to send the Redeemer.

The lack of piety on the part of the government leaders is another reason for Meah Shearim's rejection of the state. Neither David Ben-Gurion nor the majority of his Cabinet colleagues are religious Jews. The situation, considered evil in itself, is aggravated by the fact that the state does not function strictly in accordance with the laws of the Torah. The public violation of the Sabbath is a perpetual source of provocation. Another is the conscription of girls for army service, though those from Orthodox homes are exempt. The swimming pool for mixed bathing in Jerusalem has become a particular target for the quarter's anger and bitterness.

The walls of Meah Shearim are plastered with hysterical posters denouncing the government in the strongest language. Government leaders are charged with every conceivable transgression—moral and religious. The pious are called upon to protest, to fast and to pray for deliverance from the hands of "wicked rulers." An unsuspecting stranger might easily be led to believe that Ben-Gurion and his associates are violent anti-Semites who take sadistic pleasure in persecuting God-fearing Jews whose sole crime is fidelity to the Torah.

Strolling one morning last summer in Meah Shearim, I greeted a Hassid who, upon discovering that I was an American Jew, responded with uncommon enthusiasm. Without a moment's delay he began to fill my ears with vehement denunciations against the state and its leaders. With fiery indignation, he condemned the President of Israel for the non-kosher food he was certain to eat at his (then forthcoming) official visit to the Brussels Fair. My suggestion that perhaps Ben Zvi might eat fish was met with the rejoinder that the dishes would certainly be non-kosher. The Hassid became confused as I proceeded to question him further and suggested that I go with him to Rabbi Aron Katzenelbogen who would be able to enlighten me more fully than he could. I readily agreed.

Rabbi Katzenelbogen is the intellectual leader of the Neturai Karta. His home, located in one of the many alleys, is exceedingly modest, with the barest of furniture—beds, a table and several chairs of the simplest variety. The rabbi is a large and imposing man physically, with the usual peyoth and beard, and a face which speaks of indignation, anger and hurt. His gaze is keen and penetrating. The hypnotic effect of his eloquent and torrential speech I found hard to resist. From his lips, and even more from the depths of his being, there poured forth so fierce a hatred for the State of Israel as to leave me utterly speechless. His blind fanaticism—a fanaticism which would falter before nothing—was truly frightening.

Born in Eretz Israel some 70 years ago, this venerable scholar protested bitterly that even the Turks did not dare outrage the religious sensibilities of pious Jews as do Ben-Gurion and his "atheistic" associates. Proudly and fiercely he asserted that he deemed it a great mitzvah to prevent Jews, by force if necessary, from desecrating the Sabbath.

ONE MAN'S OPINION

Sholom Aleichem In Geneva

By BERYL SEGAL

Unless we can find a way to peace we shall all perish from the face of the earth. On this all the peoples of the earth agree.

"We all know that we live very close to the edge of disaster," warned Dr. Robert Oppenheimer in a recent address before a conference of scientists.

"We can destroy your country with six of our Atom bombs," boasted Nikita Khrushchev during a "friendly" reception for a Western diplomat, as he was sipping his vodka, according to a report from Moscow.

And so the great powers of the earth sent their top diplomats to find a way for peaceful solutions to the problems of the world, to prevent disaster, and to save this planet of ours from being pulverized into cosmic dust.

But before they got down to business, they had to agree on some very important matters.

Should the table at which the Big Three Foreign Ministers will sit be round or square?

Should the tables for the ministers of the smaller countries be removed that much or thus far from the main table?

Who sits where? Who dines with whom? Who speaks what, and when?

And the United Nations? Is the Secretary General invited for the Benediction only, or is he to take part in the search for peace?

And we who read these stories from Geneva and hear the eyewitness reports from the correspondents over radio and TV, are wondering when will the saviors of the world come to the real point? Or will they ever get around to the main issue? Peace, peace, will they ever find the way to peace?

Sholom Aleichem, the great Yiddish humorist whose one hundredth birthday is now being observed, wrote a short story some seventy years ago, and it fits very well the goings on in Geneva today.

The story is called "The Treasure" and it tells of a rumor spread in town that on the other side of the mountain, behind the old Schul, someone, long ago, buried a treasure. The only way to find this buried treasure was to get together, the whole town as one man, and to dig for the hidden coffer.

Everyone knew that only by digging together, by refraining from strife and anger, by living in harmony and free of malice, only then would they find the treasure.

Otherwise the coveted treasure would sink deeper and deeper into the mountain.

And so the people of the town gathered around the mountain one fine day to begin the search for the hidden treasure.

One said:

"Let us start digging here. This surely is the place where the treasure is buried."

The other one said:

"No. This is not the right place. We must dig over there."

Soon the other people took sides. Some argued that the best spot to dig was on the top of the mountain. The others insisted on a spot at the foot of the mountain. Some were sure that the middle of the mountain was sure to contain the coffer.

And so the arguments ran for hours and days. Friends turned into enemies. Fathers disagreed with children. Insults were hurled. Fights broke out.

All because of the hidden treasure.

And the treasure?

It sank deeper and deeper into the rocky bowels of the mountain, further and further away from the reach of the townspeople.

A short story written by a great humorist in 1888, and, alas, it fits so well the Geneva conference of Foreign Ministers of 1959.

(Mr. Segal's opinions are his own. His views are not necessarily those of this newspaper.)

Asks That More Jews From U.S. Go To Israel

JERUSALEM—Prime Minister David Ben Gurion, a firm believer in the proposition that American Jews would be good for Israel and that Israel would be good for American Jews, appealed again for them to come.

Speaking to 100 Israel Bond delegates from Toronto and Philadelphia, the Premier said Jewish mothers outside of Israel should allow their children to take part in the development of Israel.

The call was applauded by the delegates, who included several women. Ben Gurion instantly commented that he regarded the women's applause as a promise to heed his call and added: "the promise of a Jewish mother is good."

said the universe was all motion and Zeno said there was no such thing as motion. Heraclitus won the argument, Socrates explained, by walking away and saying to Zeno if you don't think there's motion, just keep talking. See, said Socrates, who's crazy now? Xanthippe said, "All three of you."

When Socrates was in jail awaiting execution, Xanthippe came to visit him. She didn't commiserate with him, nor did she complain about the unjust jury. She didn't even try to buck him up. All she wanted to know was why couldn't he mind his own business and stay out of trouble. Xanthippe was practical and wanted a practical answer.

Philosophy is a challenge that the universe may not be all—or may be more than—it appears. This is a challenge that only appeals to men. To a woman who has to wash diapers, it is an immaterial challenge. Maybe the child she cares for is not real, but if it's well cared for, the next-door neighbor will know it. Watch a woman make a pie sometime and you will witness the absolute economy of motion, knowledge and skill.

A friend who writes excellent papers on symbolic logic told me once that a philosopher is a blind man in a dark room hunting for a black cat. His wife said that a philosopher was a blind man in a dark room hunting for a black cat that wasn't there.

Why Women Are Not Philosophers

BY HARRY GOLDEN

I would like us to consider why the ladies are not philosophers. They simply will not set their hearts upon it. Why not? I think it is because women believe that philosophy is essentially a lazy man's job. Which it is. But that doesn't make it any less a job. Women, however, simply do not admire a man if his mode of work is to sit staring out a window, or standing still, like Immanuel Kant used to do, just to watch a clock strike. Immanuel Kant listened to the clock strike in the Leipzig town square one day and went home and wrote his great book on metaphysics. Can you imagine what your wife would say about such a state of affairs?

Socrates, who lived in ancient Athens, was the first and perhaps the greatest philosopher. Later, he got mixed up in a bad political situation and was condemned to death. Anyway, Socrates was a stonecutter. About the time he enters recorded history, he was 60, and not too anxious about finding steady work, although he was judged an excellent workman.

Instead of working, Socrates used to perambulate through the Athenian marketplace where some of the young aristocrats would meet him. They didn't have to work either and they appreciated Socrates because he put them straight about philosophy. He told them philosophy was not a search for the right answers but a search for the right questions. All day they would discuss matters of importance—what is justice?—Is there such a thing as a perfect state?—How does a man say what he means?

Meanwhile, Socrates' wife, Xanthippe, was at home caring for several children and waiting for that pay envelope Socrates never brought home. She used to raise hob with him about it, too. As a consequence, home was never too pleasant a place for Socrates and he avoided going there until it was absolutely necessary.

Once Socrates tried to tell his wife about the argument between Zeno and Heraclitus. Heraclitus

Casey Stengel, Conservative Radical

(Lest some readers think that this column is deliberately jumping on Casey Stengel because he is at least temporarily down, reference is made to the April 24 issue, in which this project was announced. At that time Stengel's Yankees were serenely situated only 2 1/4 games out of first place, and there was no sign of the current debacle.)

Political science teaches that the radical of today is the conservative of tomorrow. In his early years with the Yankees, Casey Stengel was a radical, with new ideas, fast action, brilliant maneuvering, and impeccable strategy.

Now, an old man who has sat on the throne of baseball for so long, spoiled and dulled by his unprecedented success, Stengel is a radical turned conservative. Experiment and change no longer are for him. The man who annually used to present more than 100 different lineups during a 154-game season now sticks conservatively to the same basic lineup, pointing to the past success of this arrangement.

In his handling of players, Casey has gone so far back that he might be called a radical conservative. Examples are plentiful; space permits only a few.

Shortly after he had won the World Series last fall (with some generous assistance from his players), Casey Stengel announced that Elston Howard henceforth would be his regular catcher, and would be in the lineup every day. Yogi Berra, the legendary one while still active, would revert to handy man status — part catcher, part first baseman, and part right fielder.

The move seemed to make sense. Berra was showing signs of wearing out. His hitting in the first half of the previous two seasons had been worse than anemic. In Florida and on the way North this spring he was averaging a puny .100.

Howard, meantime, had become the team's top clutch performer and its best hitter, exclusive perhaps of Mantle, and he was murdering the ball all spring (last spring, too).

But on opening day Stengel changed his mind. Berra went back behind the bat, and Howard sat on the bench. Now, some 30-odd games later, Yogi still is in there every day (including complete double headers), and Elston's only regular duty has been as a fill-in first baseman for the injured Moose Skowron — which is an exact turnabout from the dogma that Casey had proclaimed earlier.

Retribution of a sort for this breach of plan was swift and emphatic. Berra continued helpless at the plate, and failed to bat in a single run until the 17th game. By that time the dismal hitting of the team had plunged it into seventh place. Howard, his smoking bat once packed away in the asbestos of the bat rack, sat on the bench and soon lost his touch. When finally recalled to active duty because of Skowron's injury, he had lost his hitting groove.

Throughout the spring training sessions, and all the way North, Marv Throneberry was hitting like mad. So good did he look that when Skowron injured his back, the Moose was told cheerfully to take his time about getting well.

Throneberry hit the ball so solidly in the opening game and looked so good that the convalescing Skowron went to the manager and said he wanted to get back in the lineup — bad back or no.

With Throneberry going so great, and Skowron such a risk, Stengel nevertheless yielded to the entreaties of his regular first baseman, took the risk of another injury to that bad back, and benched a player who was hot in favor of one who was a physical risk. On the bench, Throneberry soon rusted, and when called for pinch-hitting duty a week or so later, he was a flop.

This is not the first time Stengel's preferential treatment of Skowron has surprised and baffled me. Every year Casey proclaims that if Bill would learn the strike zone, he would lead the league in hitting. But the Moose never learns the strike zone, the manager never does anything but talk about it, and the first baseman annually becomes discouraged, goes into long slumps, and a la Willard Nixon at his potential best, only hints at the greatness that may be in him.

Over the years, Skowron has been at his best when the bases are empty, or when a rally is getting started. Thus, it seems he would be an ideal leadoff or number two hitter. He is incredibly poor in the clutch. Most of his RBI and his big home runs come when the Yanks are ahead. With the bases loaded and one or two runs needed to tie or win, Moose is usually as helpless as a babe. This has been the case ever since Skowron first came up; yet, Stengel has persistently kept Skowron in the crucial "cleanup" area of the batting order, and thus sharply impaired the Yankees' scoring punch.

Casey Stengel believes that when he departs the baseball scene, he will leave behind as a monument to his own managerial greatness one of the greatest players of all time, Mickey Mantle.

The only trouble is that Mantle is more likely to be remembered as the man who failed to capitalize on his great talents, rather than as the protege of that great man, Stengel.

Good years such as he enjoyed in 1956 and 1957 should be routine with Mantle, who should hit around .375 every year. But Mickey still wallows uncertainly through year after year of relative mediocrity, and his doting manager must share the blame. With his tremendous talent, Mantle is a notoriously inept and uncertain performer, hitting only in great spurts, striking out far too often (surprisingly often with his bat on his shoulder), and fielding with a careless nonchalance that hurts his team.

Mickey is a victim of intense anger and temperamental flareups when things don't go right for him, and he makes not a move to spur on his mates or to be their leader. Very likely, a little prodding and needling, a good tongue lashing, an attempt to get to the inside of Mickey's emotional problems, would set him straight.

But Stengel cannot say a harsh word to his boy. His strongest remonstrances have been a remark (Continued on Page 11) tail that wags the dog, so does Mantle with Stengel.

When Mickey is periodically hobbled with leg injuries and obviously should be on the bench or off his feet, the manager does not write a substitute's name into his lineup card. Instead, he asks Mickey how he feels, and does he want to play or sit the game out. The not-too-bright Mantle, apparently determined to prove that he can match Casey's stupidity with plenty of his own, grits his teeth and reaches for his glove and hobbles out to center field.

Many of Mickey's injuries have been insensibly prolonged because Stengel simply would not take him out. This is an open scandal among the Yankees.

When Mickey was batting .381 and trailing Ted Williams by some four points a couple of years ago, he refused to leave the lineup when he suffered a severe case of shin splints. He didn't want, he said, to win or lose the batting title on the bench. Hardly able to walk, and getting worse with every aggravating game, Mantle nonetheless played every day. Writers and players alike were shocked at Stengel, when the manager first allowed Mickey to play, then complained to the press that Mickey wouldn't let him, Stengel, take him out. Who the heck was running this team, anyhow, Mantle or Stengel, was the indignant buzz of comment.

Casey Stengel has earned the greatness that is his. But there comes a time for all men, and it appears to be at hand for Casey. I saw the signs last year when he was on top; I see them even more clearly now that he is not.

Plainly, I believe Stengel has gone irrevocably over the hill. He has had it.

The Lyons Den

by Leonard Lyons

Gen. Emmett "Rosy" O'Donnell, who will head the Pacific Air Forces, is the New Yorker who led the first B-29 raids over Tokyo. With Gens. Giles and LeMay, he flew nonstop from Japan to Chicago. When O'Donnell learned that they would be decorated for this record flight he laughed: "Decorations? For three guys who schemed a way to get home in a hurry?"

The President just elevated O'Donnell to the rank of full general. A dozen years ago he held the temporary rank of brigadier general, but his permanent rank was only major. He warned a friend who glanced at his general's stars: "Don't blow, or they'll fall right off."

One Sunday, after he'd left Florida to return to his Colorado base, he showed up at a New York party where, by chance, he met Gen. Walter Bedell Smith. O'Donnell quickly explained his presence there: "I was on my way back to Colorado, but I got shot down in flames near here — as you can see by my blistered thumb — so I decided, as long as I'm near, to visit my home."

A writer complained vehemently about the income-tax rates to Ernest Hemingway who advised him: "Maybe you ought to learn now and write later" . . . Pat O'Brien is the leading contender for the politician's role in "The Gang's All Here" . . . Abba Eban, who became Israel's Ambassador here at 33, said: "One advantage of starting young is that it enables you to attain seniority without the simultaneous status of decrepitude."

Gwen Verdon, star of "Redhead," first won Broadway's attention in "Can-Can." But her first musical role was as a gypsy in the ill-fated musical, "Bonanza Bound," which closed out of town. The producers refused her the understudying job for the lead, played by Allyn McLerie . . . Miss McLerie, now a mother and happily wed to George Gaynes, is Gwen Verdon's standby in "Redhead."

Frank Capra, the veteran film director, is rewriting the motion picture section for Encyclopaedia Britannica. Capra's newest film is "A Hole in the Head" . . . Betty Comden and Adolph Green, who won unanimous raves for their current show, "A Party," may star with it at the Westport Playhouse after the run ends here . . . Eydie Gorme saw a bedraggled man watching a man drive by in a Cadillac, and sighing: "There, but for me, go I."

Queen Juliana of The Netherlands, who just celebrated her 50th birthday, is the mother of girls. During her last visit to America she was introduced to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr., who is the mother of two sons. When Mrs. Roosevelt facetiously suggested: "Let's swap recipes," the Queen was shocked — until she learned what "recipes" meant. She thought that Mrs. Roosevelt had suggested that they swap husbands.

APPOINTED CHAIRMAN

Harold Tregar has been appointed chairman of the nominating committee of the Bureau of Jewish Education. It was announced by Alter Boyman, president.

Mr. Tregar and his committee will prepare a slate of officers and board members to be recommended for election at the Annual Meeting of the Bureau, which will be held on Tuesday evening, June 16.

The first meeting of the nominating committee will take place on Sunday.

TO HONOR TEACHERS

"The Proud Jew," the story of a progressive people, will be the subject of Rabbi Robert Schenkerman's sermon tonight at the regular Friday night services of Temple Sinai.

"Yelamdenu Rabbenu!" — Let Our Teachers Instruct Us — will be the theme of the Oneg Shabbat following the services. In recognition of the teachers' role in the lives of children and parents, the teachers of the Temple Sinai religious school will be honored at the Oneg Shabbat. These teachers are Miss Lillian Gilstein, Mrs. Ruth Garber, Mrs. Natalie Liebowitz, Mrs. Diana Silk, Mrs. Sophie Cohen, Miss Asya Eliash, Lester Aptel and Rabbi Schenkerman.

GRADUATION CEREMONY

Temple Beth El will hold its 29th graduation ceremony for its high school department during the Sabbath eve service on Friday, May 29.

The seven students who have attended for two years beyond their Confirmation and have successfully completed their high school religious studies are Gene Baruch, Marjorie Blum, Sheila Efron, Ruth Halpert, Joan Katzman, Betty Lisker and Valerie Nelson.

PRICE INDEX TO BE UPDATED

Recently, among the 300 items which the Government has been pricing in 46 cities to see what's happening to our cost of living, has been frozen orange juice. On what it has found out about the price gyrations of this ONE juice, it is now deciding whether we're paying more or less this month than last for all frozen juices on the market.

This summer, though, the reporters of the Bureau of Labor Statistics will start pricing a couple of other juices and several other frozen foods, too. At last the Government is going to give us a more accurate picture of how prices of frozen foods — an increasingly big item in the market baskets of millions of us — are fluctuating from month to month.

Also this past week, BLS reporters have been checking new auto prices at two Chevrolet dealers, two Ford dealers and two Plymouth dealers in five big and about a dozen or so smaller cities. Upon what it has learned from this small sampling the BLS is now determining whether we're paying more or less for all new cars.

This summer, however, the reporters will begin checking many more car dealers in these cities each month. At last the Government is going to give us a more precise picture of what we're really paying for new cars.

Finally, it is going to happen. The Government's consumer price index — the only measurement we have of our living cost changes — is to be made more complete, more responsive to price movements of the goods and services we're actually buying today, more a reflection of what is happening to our cost of living from month to month.

Without fanfare or fuss, Ewan Clague, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, is coaxing $200,000 extra out of Congress to improve the Frank Sullivan, the humorist who was feted here recently, told a man from Tel Aviv: "I once became an O'Zionist" . . . Perle Mesta is writing her autobiography for serialization in the Saturday Evening Post . . . Peppy D'Albrow, who just resumed his cafe operations with a new place near Gramercy Park, once was barred from the Stork Club. He gained re-entry by taking the job of air-raid warden for the block. Friends gave him a helmet, with a bull's-eye on it.

Akim Tamiroff, co-star of "Rashomon," worked with the Lunts on their first TV show. Lunt perspired under the strange TV lights. He noticed that Tamiroff seemed cool and relaxed in the warm atmosphere, and asked how he did it. "I have a secret," Tamiroff explained. "I just close my eyes, pretend I'm in Palm Springs paying $1,000 for the sunshine — and enjoy it."

The N. Y. police became alerted recently with a report of a mass prison break from Rikers Island. It was cancelled when a prison guard confessed he'd miscounted his prisoners . . . In discussing education, Pearl Buck says that her son once complained: "School's all right for one thing — they're always trying to teach me something." . . . Tom Dewey's younger son, now with the Army in Europe, is flying home to attend his brother's wedding.

Those of us who live near Central Park were disappointed at the Mayor's acceptance of Robert Moses' ban against Joseph Papp's free Shakespeare productions in the park. It was a thrilling sight to see thousands of New Yorkers flocking to these shows which can vie with Stratford's. An editorial writer suggested that the Mayor ought to raise his voice and stamp his foot at Moses. On the contrary; the Mayor should lower his voice and raise his foot.

Sydney Chaplin returned from Europe last week to sign for a Broadway show . . . The Rubirosas were in El Morocco the other night . . . Alan King, comedy star of Judy Garland's show, worked at Grossinger's one week-end, then went directly to rehearsals at the Met Opera House . . . James Cromwell, ex-husband of Doris Duke, won the Harry Winston diamond in the raffle at the J.O.B. dance . . . John Mason Brown's research for his book on Robert E. Sherwood unearthed the playwright's description of Eisenhower's Washington: "It's an off-Wall St. production."

Helen Hayes made her first visit recently to Herb Greene, the voice coach. She hoped that after a few sessions with him she would be able to determine whether or not to accept the starring role in the musical, "Mrs. Arris Goes to Paris." After this first meeting the voice coach was optimistic about her ability to sing in a theater. And Miss Hayes said in surprise: "I tried doing this in my bathtub and under my shower — but there it never worked."

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

accuracy of this index — which a Congressional committee has called "the most important single statistic issued by the Government." The House already has approved the money; the Senate seems in agreement; approval appears sure.

"It is imperative that we broaden and modernize this index at once," said Clague, when I interviewed him on this in New York the other day. "We can't afford a faulty index which could mislead us."

You know this index is important, of course. But do you fully grasp how much its ups and downs touch the lives of millions of us?

Over 4,000,000 workers are under wage contracts which provide for cost-of-living adjustments according to changes in this index, and the ages of 400,000 additional workers are similarly influenced.

A change of a single point in this index adds or subtracts a whopping $200 million a year to wages under these contracts alone!

A rise of one point in this index swells the Government's expenses by $22 million a year as a result of automatic wage increases.

Changes in this price index profoundly affect public psychology on inflation, Government policies on credit, social security, taxes, etc.

"We have been checking only 300 goods and services to indicate all price trends, and these were selected a decade ago," Clague stressed again and again. "We can no longer rely on so small a group of items, many of which are out of date, to reflect price trends."

So the BLS will use part of its new funds to get hundreds of thousands of additional price quotations each year on foods, clothing, household furnishings, medical services, autos, etc.

"We have been getting prices mostly from department stores and shops in central cities," Clague added. "We must include more stores."

So the BLS will use part of its money to collect prices from discount houses and stores in suburban shopping centers, too.

"We have been getting monthly quotes in all 46 cities only for food and fuels," he went on. "Most other prices are priced monthly only in five cities. We well may be exaggerating nationwide changes."

So the BLS now will be pricing goods and services more frequently to catch the impact of special sales, price wars, other developments.

"The index then is to become a more accurate reflection of our cost of living?" I asked Clague.

"Undoubtedly," he said. "And it will help us get by until we can thoroughly overhaul the index."

U. S. TO OVERHAUL OUR 'MARKET BASKET'

The symbolic American family whose marketbasket of 300 goods and services stands for the marketbasket of all of us in the Government's consumer price index is headed by a wage-earner or clerical worker who lives in a city, holds a year-round job and averaged $4,160 after taxes in 1952.

Does the marketbasket of this family match that of an older, retired couple today? Or a family headed by a doctor, lawyer, small businessman? Or a suburban family with several small children? Or a bachelor?

Of course it does not — not by a long shot.

The chunk of each paycheck dollar this symbolic family spent on food in 1952 supposedly represents the chunk your family is spending on food in 1959. The chunk it spent on clothing in 1952 supposedly represents the chunk you're spending on clothing in 1959 — and the same goes for everything else.

Does the 1952 spending pattern of this family match the 1959 spending pattern of yours? Are you spending about the same percentage on medical care, housing, repairs, etc. today as in the early '50s?

Almost certainly you are not — not by a long shot.

The marketbasket which is the basis for the government's crucially important consumer price index is out of date.

The planning for the overhaul, the first in a decade, will start this summer. Surveys of the new families and preparation of the new marketbasket will run through 1963. The new index will be ready in 1964.

What is the bureau going to use its money to find out?

Surely, it will carefully re-examine the "typical" families upon whose spending patterns the index is based. Although there has been considerable antagonism to including in this index any family not headed by a wage-earner or clerical worker, there is serious question about the omission of so many of the rest of us.

"Perhaps an answer will be the creation of separate indexes for older couples, single persons, etc.," said Clague.

Surely, the bureau will make vital changes in the "weights" given to each of the items in the marketbasket to reflect the dramatic differences in the way we're spending today as compared with 1952.

For there is no doubt that family incomes (after taxes and after allowance for higher prices) have soared in this decade. And families moving up the income scale spend a smaller proportion of their dollars for food, and the foods they buy include more fresh and frozen fruits and vegetables, more meats. They spend a larger proportion on TV, autos, vacations, medical care, education.

There is no doubt that families are larger than in the early '50s, and families with more children and old people spend more of their incomes for food, less for other things.

There is no doubt about the surge to the suburbs, and suburban families spend more on cars and home ownership, less on rent, clothing and probably less on vacations away from home.

There is no doubt that more families are living in the Southwest and West than a decade ago, and the needs of these families are different from the needs of families in the north.

The overhaul will take time but, Clague stressed enthusiastically, "We're making a start. We'll create an index which will realistically reflect the economy whose price movements we're measuring."

And in the meantime, we'll have a broadened and modernized index upon which to rely. This is heartening, this is progress.
